Uniformity Doctrine of 1889 Constitution Embodied in Equal Protection Clause of 1972 Constitution: Plaintiffs challenged the constitutionality of 20-25-439, asserting that the tax levy for vocational-technical schools resulted in an unequal tax burden on five counties where the schools are located, even though the schools are part of the statewide University System. The state contended that the levy is not unconstitutional because it is rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. The 1889 Montana Constitution contained a uniformity doctrine that required a tax to be levied by a general law that is uniform within the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax; however, that uniformity doctrine does not appear in the plain language of the 1972 Montana Constitution. Nevertheless, plaintiffs asserted that the uniformity doctrine is still a constitutional requirement apart from equal protection guarantees. The state argued that because the uniformity doctrine is not part of the 1972 Montana Constitution, the levy could not be violative of the doctrine. The District Court agreed with the state and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the statement defining the uniformity doctrine in Hilger v. Moore, 56 M 146, 182 P 477 (1919), was subsequently applied in post-1972 cases, but disagreed that the definition supports any stricter limitation on taxation than that imposed by equal protection. The framers of the 1972 Montana Constitution intended to preserve the uniformity doctrine only as it is equivalent to equal protection requirements. Thus, the uniformity doctrine as interpreted under the 1889 Montana Constitution, which provided for equal protection in the area of taxation, is still embodied in the 1972 Montana Constitution in the equal protection clause. Analysis of the constitutionality of the levy in question was therefore conducted under the equal protection clause. Kottel v. St., 2002 MT 278, 312 M 387, 60 P3d 403 (2002).

County Allowed Choice Whether to Issue Bonds Secured by Revolving Fund — County Not Relieved of Obligation to Make Loans to Deficient Rural Special Improvement Districts: The plain meaning of statutes regarding revolving funds, as well as the legislative history, supports the legislative intent to allow counties to choose whether to finance a rural special improvement district by issuing bonds secured by the revolving fund. Nothing in the statutes voids the commitment to loan from the revolving fund if the district becomes deficient. In this case, County Commissioners agreed to a revolving fund obligation and issued bonds secured by the revolving fund. The District Court reasoned that this was a violation of the constitutional prohibition against indebtedness beyond a certain percent, holding that the county was thus relieved of its obligation to make such loans. However, special improvement bond obligations are limited to the district funds and, if necessary, receive loans from the revolving fund. If both funds are insufficient to meet bond payments, there is no other source to pay the bonds. Under 7-12-2182, revolving fund levies are limited to an amount that would increase the balance in the fund to no more than 5% of the principal amount of the outstanding bonds. The District Court erred in its decision that the county was not obligated to make loans to the special improvement districts. Having exercised the discretion to institute a revolving fund and freely enter into an agreement with the bondholders and the underwriters, under both the terms of the agreement and applicable statutes, a county is obliged to carry out that contractual obligation. Loans from the revolving fund and subsequent tax levies are within the constitutional mandates of this section, which requires that state funds be used for public purposes. Further, a county's obligation to make such loans and levy taxes to fund the revolving fund is mandatory, rather than discretionary, and is not an unconstitutional pledge of credit. Carbon County v. Dain Bosworth, Inc., 265 M 75, 874 P2d 718, 51 St. Rep. 436 (1994), distinguishing Stanley v. Jeffries, 86 M 114, 284 P 134 (1929), and Hansen v. Havre, 112 M 207, 114 P2d 1053 (1941).

Use of In-State Investment Fund to Guarantee Private Loans or Bonds Unconstitutional: The provisions of 17-6-308, which permit the use of in-state investment fund money derived from taxation to guarantee loans or bonds of private individuals or private entities either directly or through the capital reserve account or through the economic development guaranty fund, are unconstitutional under the provisions of this section, which provide that taxes shall be levied by general laws for public purposes. Hollow v. St., 222 M 478, 723 P2d 227, 43 St. Rep. 1435 (1986), distinguished in Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ.-N., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179, 54 St. Rep. 1295 (1997).

Public Purpose Construed: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. Plaintiff contended that the plan of issuing bonds under Ch. 705, L. 1983, for loans to local governments for water systems violated Art. VIII, sec. 1, Mont. Const. Plaintiff contended that the funds used to service a debt of coal severance tax bonds are generated by the general taxing powers of the state and that the funds were to be used for special local purposes. The court held that the question of whether a particular purpose for which taxes may be levied and collected is a public purpose is for the Legislature in the first instance, and the courts will indulge every reasonable presumption in favor of the legislative decision. The court found that it was clear that the purposes for which the loans were authorized affected the inhabitants of the particular areas as communities and not merely as individuals. The use of the loan proceeds was clearly for public purposes. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Coal Severance Tax — Nondiscriminatory — Not Burden on Commerce: Montana coal producers and out-of-state utility customers brought suit challenging the constitutionality of Montana's severance tax on coal mined in the State. The U.S. Supreme Court held that Montana may constitutionally raise general revenue by imposing a severance tax on coal mined in the State. The entire value of the coal before transportation originates in the State, and mining the coal depletes the resource base and wealth of the State, thereby diminishing a future source of taxes and economic activity. The severance tax was found not to discriminate against interstate commerce under the four-part test set forth in Complete Auto Transit v. Brady, 430 US 274 (1977). The court held when, as here, a general revenue tax does not discriminate against interstate commerce and is apportioned to activities occurring within the State, the State is free to pursue its own fiscal policies, unembarrassed by the Constitution, if by the practical operation of a tax the State has exerted its power in relation to opportunities which it has given, to protection which it has afforded, and to benefits which it has conferred by fact of being an orderly civilized society. Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Mont., 101 S Ct 2946 (1981).

Public Purpose — Bond Proceeds: The use of the bond money authorized by Title 90, ch. 2, for the purpose of lending money to private individuals is not violative of this section as authorizing the levy to taxes for other than a "public purpose". Douglas v. Judge, 174 M 32, 568 P2d 530 (1977).

Public Purpose — Housing Act of 1975: An act to provide low-income housing is for a public purpose and is not violative of this section. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976).

General Law — Property Tax Assessment for School Purposes: Property tax assessment requiring all property in Montana to be levied upon at the same rate was clearly a general law, and the Legislature was free to use the proceeds for any public purpose. State ex rel. Woodahl v. Straub, 164 M 141, 520 P2d 776 (1974), certiorari denied, Straub v. Woodahl, 419 US 845, 42 L Ed 2d 73, 95 S Ct 79 (1974).

PUBLIC PURPOSE

Unreasonable Tax Imposed on Trading Stamps: Chapter which discriminatorily restrained the use of trading stamps or other redeemable devices in retail business by imposing an unreasonably high and prohibitive tax for nonpublic purpose was unconstitutional under Art. XII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. Garden Spot Market, Inc. v. Byrne, 141 M 382, 378 P2d 220 (1963).

Special Improvements — Revolving Funds: Contention that 7-12-4221 through 7-12-4228, referring to the matter of special improvement district revolving funds, conflict with this provision of the Constitution as authorizing a tax for private purposes, held groundless under authority of the case of Stanley v. Jeffries, 86 M 114, 284 P 134 (1929). Hansen v. Havre, 112 M 207, 114 P2d 1053 (1941).

Public Purpose — Test for Determination: The purpose must affect the inhabitants as a community and not merely as individuals. Whether a tax is levied for a public or private purpose is to be determined by the course or usage of the government, the object for which such a tax has by a long course of legislation been levied, and what objects have been considered necessary for the proper support and use of the government sanctioned by time and the acquiescence of the people. Lumberman's Trust Co. v. Ryegate, 61 F2d 14 (9th Cir. 1932); Stanley v. Jeffries, 86 M 114, 284 P 134 (1929).

County High School Bonds: Chapter 29, L. 1929 (now repealed), authorizing the issuance of county bonds for high school purposes was not violative of the provisions of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Henderson v. Dawson County, 87 M 122, 286 P 125 (1930).

Public Purpose — Governmental Purposes: The words "public purposes" are synonymous with "governmental purposes". State ex rel. Mills v. Dixon, 66 M 76, 213 P 227 (1923), overruled on other grounds in State ex rel. Graham v. Bd. of Examiners, 125 M 419, 239 P2d 283 (1952).

Public Purpose — Legislative Determination: The question whether a particular purpose for which taxes may be levied and collected is a public one is for the Legislature in the first instance, and courts will indulge every reasonable presumption in favor of the legislative decision in this respect. Lewis & Clark County v. Indus. Accident Bd., 52 M 6, 155 P 268 (1916).

UNIFORMITY

Public Contractors' Tax: Section 15-50-206, imposing a 1% gross receipts tax on public contractors, did not violate Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., since the separate classification of public contractors from private contractors is reasonable. Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 161 M 140, 505 P2d 102 (1973), distinguished in Garrett Freightlines, Inc. v. Mont. R.R. & P.S.C., 161 M 482, 507 P2d 1040 (1973).

Discriminatory Enforcement: State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) could enforce statute providing for assessment of property brought into state subsequent to regular assessment date as against trucks and used cars without also enforcing it against every other type of retail inventory and without violating uniformity requirement of the Montana Constitution. Hardin Auto Co. v. Alley, 149 M 1, 422 P2d 346 (1967).

Special Improvements — Irrigation District: Article XII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., and sec. 11 of the same article, providing for a uniform rate of taxation and that taxes shall be levied and collected for public purposes only, relate to taxation for governmental purposes and have no reference to assessments for special improvements such as contemplated by the creation of an irrigation district. Bidlingmeyer v. Deer Lodge, 128 M 292, 274 P2d 821 (1954); Thaanum v. Bynum Irrigation District, 72 M 221, 232 P 528 (1925); Walden v. Bitter Root Irrigation District, 68 M 281, 217 P 646 (1923).

Railroad Freight Cars: A foreign corporation was not engaged in transportation of commodities within state but owned freight cars which were furnished to common carriers. The foreign corporation's cars were not taxed in proportion to amount of and actual physical presence and use within several taxing districts of state. Freight cars owned by others were taxed on a different basis. The state did not levy any tax against freight cars owned by railroads not operating within state but which were furnished for compensation to railroads operating within state. The tax against cars of foreign corporations was discriminatory and denied due process of law and equal protection. St. v. N. Am. Car Corp., 118 M 183, 164 P2d 161 (1945).

Relates to Uniform Assessment, Not Enforcement: The collection of taxes in an unusual way (Title 15, ch. 8, part 2, relating to motor vehicles) does not violate the uniformity provision of the Constitution. It is the levy or assessment of the tax which must be uniform, not the means of enforcement. Wheir v. Dye, 105 M 347, 73 P2d 209 (1937).

Uniform Upon Same Class of Subjects — Within Territorial Limits of the Authority Levying Tax: There is nothing in the act providing for the issuance of bonds for buildings at the state tuberculosis sanitarium which conflicts in any manner with Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., which provides that "taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws and for public purposes only. They shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax." As we have already noticed, the act does not impose any additional burden upon the various counties, either in the way of tax or otherwise. It is apparently conceded that the money which the institution now receives from the counties for the care of patients is "money lawfully acquired from the various counties of the state". There is nothing in Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., to prohibit the state from using money lawfully acquired from the counties for the purposes specified in Ch. 22, Ex. L. 1933-34 (omitted). The counties, without any additional burden or tax imposed upon them, will receive benefits corresponding to those which they are now receiving for the money thus expended by them. It is manifest that the proposed diversion of the payments now received from counties and heretofore used for maintenance will of necessity reduce the maintenance fund of the institution and require a larger contribution from the state in the way of appropriations from the general fund of the state. But this is a matter of legislative discretion and something with which we have nothing to do at this time. State ex rel. Hawkins v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 97 M 441, 35 P2d 116 (1934).

Taxation of Bank Shares: Where a state bank in an action to recover taxes paid under protest alleged, inter alia, that Ch. 64, L. 1929 (15-6-204), was invalid as offending against the uniformity clause of the 1889 Constitution, on the ground that while its shares were taxed there was no law under which shares of corporations other than those engaged in banking could be taxed, proof that the stock of a large number of corporations had not been taxed was insufficient in the absence of further evidence that the value of such outstanding stock exceeded the value of the property on which the corporations paid taxes. Bank of Miles City v. Custer County, 93 M 291, 19 P2d 885 (1933). See also Merchants' Nat'l Bank v. Dawson County, 93 M 310, 19 P2d 892 (1933).

State Bank Stock — National Bank Stock: Under Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., taxes must be uniform upon the same class of subjects. Defendant assessor placed the stock of shareholders of a state bank in class 6 of section 84-301, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), requiring payment of taxes on a basis of 40% of their value, while national bank shares—property of the same kind, character, and class—be placed in class 5, assessable at 7% only of their true value. Held, on application for Writ of Injunction, that the action of the taxing officer was discriminatory as against relator bank and therefore void, but that, relator having asked that state bank shares be placed in the same class in which national bank shares were placed and the taxing officers under the circumstances not being in position to object, it is proper to so place them, the question whether they could arbitrarily place such shares in class 5 being, however, reserved. State ex rel. Conrad Banking Corp. v. Mady, 83 M 418, 272 P 691 (1928).

Gasoline Dealers' License Tax: Chapter 186, L. 1925 (since repealed), imposed a license tax upon dealers and distributors of gasoline (superseded by Initiative Measure No. 31, L. 1927, p. 604). A dealer sought to recover a tax paid under protest on the grounds that the act was unconstitutional as offending against the Equal Protection of the Law Clause of the federal Constitution, as well as against the provisions of Art. XII, sec. 11, Art. XV, sec. 11, and Art. V, sec. 26, 1889 Mont. Const., to the effect that taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, that foreign corporations engaged in business in the state shall not have any greater rights or privileges than domestic corporations, and that the Legislative Assembly shall not pass local or special laws where a general law can be made to apply. Chapter 186, L. 1925, was not open to the attacks made upon it. St. v. Silver Bow Ref. Co., 83 M 380, 272 P 684 (1928); Hart Refineries v. Harmon, 81 M 423, 263 P 687 (1928).

License Tax — Same Class of Subjects: The provision of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring uniformity in taxation, does not apply to the license system of taxation, and the state is not required to tax all occupations equally or uniformly. It may tax certain classes and leave others untaxed, but such taxes must be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and in imposing them it may not resort to unreasonable or arbitrary discrimination. Hale v. Mineral County, 82 M 98, 265 P 6 (1928).

License Tax or Occupation Tax Not Inhibited by This Provision — Exception: The tax imposed by 7-21-2216 (repealed in 1979) upon a manufacturer is the license or occupation tax provided for by the last sentence of Art. XII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., and is not controlled by the uniformity clause contained in sec. 11 of the same article. Hence such license tax may be graduated according to the amount of business done and is not open to attack as being discriminatory because one doing a business of $15,000 or less a year is relieved from payment thereof. St. v. Hennessy Co., 71 M 301, 230 P 64 (1924).

Special Assessments for Drainage: Special assessments for the construction and maintenance of drainage works are not taxes within the meaning of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and hence that provision has no application. In re Valley Center Drain District, 64 M 545, 211 P 218 (1922).

Livestock — Brought to State for Grazing: A statute requiring the taxation of all livestock brought into the state after a certain date for the purpose of grazing and not applying to all other personal property constitutes an unjust discrimination and violates the uniformity rate of taxation. Hayes v. Smith, 58 M 306, 192 P 615 (1920).

Fees Based on Size of Estate: Section 25-233, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), insofar as it made it incumbent upon the Clerk of the District Court to collect from petitioners filing letters of administration or guardianship sums ranging from $5 to $95, regulated by the appraised value of the estate, was obnoxious to Art. XII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., in that the burdens imposed upon the estates falling within the enumerated classes were fixed arbitrarily and at unequal rates. Hauser v. Miller, 37 M 22, 94 P 197 (1908).

Insurance Companies: Section 681 of the Civil Code of 1895 (repealed) applies to domestic as well as foreign insurance companies and therefore complies with Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont.

Const., requiring taxes to be "uniform upon the same class of subjects". NW. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis & Clark County, 28 M 484, 72 P 982 (1903).

PROPERTY TAXES

Classification of Property — Property Located in Commercial Area: Assessment of plaintiff's property based on "market value" rather than upon use of property for agricultural purposes did not violate Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., since evidence showed that such property was located within commercial area and its market value far exceeded its value for agricultural purposes. Mohland v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 155 M 49, 466 P2d 582 (1970), certiorari denied, 400 US 940, 91 S Ct 232 (1970).

Classification of Property: Chapter 178, L. 1951, which amended section 84-301, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), was an unconstitutional exercise of the legislative function to classify property for taxation. Victor Chem. Works v. Silver Bow County, 130 M 308, 301 P2d 730 (1956).

Purchase of Tax Deed Land by Delinquent Owner: Section (now repealed) authorizing the former owner of real property held by a county under tax deed to repurchase it under certain conditions was not in violation of Art. XII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., which prohibited discharging local governments or individuals from their share of taxes. Blackford v. Judith Basin County, 109 M 578, 98 P2d 872 (1940).

Redemption of Real Property: Held, that Ch. 88, L. 1935 (omitted), authorizing redemption of real property sold to the county for taxes without the payment of interest and penalties, is not violative of either Art. V, sec. 39, or Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., or of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States. State ex rel. Sparling v. Hitsman, 99 M 521, 44 P2d 747 (1935).

Sale of Tax Deed Lands for Less Than Delinquent Amount: Under Art. XII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., which prohibited discharging local government or individuals from their share of taxes, lands held by counties under tax deed could be sold for an amount less than the general taxes delinquent thereon. State ex rel. Malott v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 89 M 37, 296 P 1 (1930).

General Law — Partial Redemption From Tax Sale: Section 15-18-103 (now repealed), requiring the County Treasurer upon the request of one seeking to redeem from tax sale a portion of a tract of land on which he holds a mortgage and which portion had not been separately assessed to compute and apportion the tax on the portion sought to be redeemed, is not unconstitutional as authorizing levy and collection of taxes in any other manner than by general law. State ex rel. Fed. Land Bank v. Hays, 86 M 58, 282 P 32 (1929).

Inheritance Tax Not Inhibited: Article XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., related to property taxes only and not to such as are imposed on inheritances. State ex rel. Rankin v. District Court, 70 M 322, 225 P 804 (1924).

"Subject of Taxation": The term "subject of taxation" found in Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., was held to have been used by the Constitutional Convention in its then proper sense, to denote the different kinds of property liable to taxation. Hilger v. Moore, 56 M 146, 182 P 477 (1919).

Local Improvements: Special assessments for local improvements in the shape of drains in order to relieve marshy lands of surplus moisture are laid under the taxing power. Their imposition does not fall within the restraints prescribed by Art. XII, sec. 4 and 11, 1889 Mont. Const., relative to how, upon whom, and on what property "taxes" may be levied. These sections refer solely to revenues which go to defray general governmental expenditures, as distinguished from special outlays to provide for purely local improvements. Billings Sugar Co. v. Fish, 40 M 256, 106 P 565 (1910).

MISCELLANEOUS

Operation and Effect: The fact that a lessor's percentages of the net smelter returns paid under its lease are net proceeds as to it and taxable as royalties under 15-23-505 and 15-23-507 and hence classified as class one of sections 84-301 and 84-302, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), does not of itself contravene Art. XII, sec. 1 and 11, 1889 Mont. Const. New Silver Bell Min. Co. v. Lewis & Clark County, 129 M 269, 284 P2d 1012 (1955).

Public Purpose — Prohibition Against Sale of Oleomargarine: Section levying a tax on dealers in oleomargarine was invalid in that it levied a tax for the purpose of prohibiting in large part the sale of oleomargarine in Montana in aid of the dairy industry and not for a public or government purpose. Brackman v. Kruse, 122 M 91, 199 P2d 971 (1948).

Ceding Jurisdiction: Section 2-1-202, ceding exclusive jurisdiction over certain state lands to federal government for public purposes without reserving the state's right to tax personal property of persons and private corporations upon such land, does not violate Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Bruce, 106 M 322, 77 P2d 403 (1938), overruled on other grounds in Valley County v. Thomas, 109 M 345, 97 P2d 345 (1939).

Scope of Legislative Classification: Assertion that the Legislature in amending 61-3-502 (now repealed) and 15-8-202, by enacting Ch. 72, L. 1937, and making special provision for taxing automobiles included in class two of section 84-301, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), among other personal property without first amending such section, unlawfully discriminated against motor vehicles, held not well made, since the Legislature may properly go even to the extent of placing identical articles in the hands of different owners, different uses resulting in different productivity. Wheir v. Dye, 105 M 347, 73 P2d 209 (1937).

License Tax: A license tax imposed for the privilege of doing business in the state is not subject to the uniformity provisions of the 1889 Montana Constitution (Art. XII, sec. 1 and 11). State ex rel. Griffin v. Greene, 104 M 460, 67 P2d 995 (1937).

Tax Burden — Coextensive With Territorial Limits of Taxing Authority: The bonds authorized by sections 75-4601 to 75-4606, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), for the construction of high schools are high school district bonds, not county bonds. The levy of taxes with which to pay them cannot extend beyond the boundaries of the particular district liable for their payment. Therefore the tax burden is coextensive with the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, conforming to Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. Pierson v. Hendricksen, 98 M 244, 38 P2d 991 (1934).

Money and Credits: The Legislature in enacting Ch. 64, L. 1929 (15-6-204), classifying money and credits for purposes of taxation, properly exercised its power, as against the contention of a state bank that such a classification is invalid under Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., and the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution since money and credits, when employed in the banking business, have a greatly increased productivity as compared to money and credits in the hands of the ordinary individual or corporation using them for casual investment only. Bank of Miles City v. Custer County, 93 M 291, 19 P2d 885 (1933).

Discrimination by Misapplication of Law Will Not Invalidate: Taxing officers assessed the shares of a national bank at their full cash value without deducting from such value governmental securities owned by the bank. In disregard of constitutional provisions relating to taxation and statutory provisions requiring like action in regard to shares in a state bank upon the assumption that such securities held by it were exempt, they deducted their value from the moneyed capital of the latter bank, the effect of which was nonassessment of its shares of stock. Held, upon a review of the statutes applicable, that they are not open to attack as offending against the provisions of section 5219, United States Revised Statutes, but that the resultant discrimination against plaintiff national bank was due to faulty administration of the law, and that therefore, under this case, the statutes may not be held invalid. Mont. Nat'l Bank v. Yellowstone County, 78 M 62, 252 P 876 (1926), reversed in Mont. Nat'l Bank v. Yellowstone County, 276 US 499, 72 L Ed 673, 48 S Ct 331 (1928).

Creation of New County — No Reimbursement to Old County: Failure to make provision for reimbursement of the county from which the greater area for a proposed new county is taken for the expense incident to the creation of the new county, held not to render Ch. 226, L. 1919 (Title 7, ch. 2, part 22), violative of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., as casting an unequal burden of taxation upon the old county. State ex rel. Woodward v. Moulton, 57 M 414, 189 P 59 (1920).

Teachers' Pensions: Section 1113, et seq., R.C.M. 1935 (since repealed), providing for teachers' pensions, is not invalid as in contravention of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. Trumper v. School District, 55 M 90, 173 P 946 (1918).

Seed-Grain Law: The seed-grain law, Ch. 13, L. 1915 (since repealed), designed to furnish aid to persons engaged in agriculture who, because they are so reduced in circumstances by natural or other conditions beyond their control, have no means wherewith to purchase seed, was not in contravention of Art. XII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Cryderman v. Weinrich, 54 M 390, 170 P 942 (1918).

Counties — Guarantors of State Loans: A statute which seeks to make the counties of the state the guarantor of loans made by the state to individuals is invalid. State ex rel. Evans v. Stewart, 53 M 18, 161 P 309 (1916).

Discharge From Tax Liability: Article XII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., which prohibited discharging local governments or individuals from their share of taxes, referred only to state taxes and not to those imposed for county or local purposes, such as poll taxes. Pohl v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 52 M 572, 160 P 515 (1916).

Banks — Deducting Deposits for Assessment: The part of section 8 of section 3695 of the Political Code of 1895 granting to private bankers the right to deduct their deposits (debts) from money on hand for purposes of assessment violated Art. XII, sec. 11 and 16, 1889 Mont. Const. Clark v. Maher, 34 M 391, 87 P 272 (1906).

Tax Increment Fund Grant to Private Nonprofit Corporation: Under 7-15-4282, a municipality is authorized to provide for tax increment financing as part of its plan for urban renewal. The grant of tax increment funds to a private nonprofit corporation for construction of a parking lot for use by a public fine arts museum was not prohibited because the grant was essentially for a public purpose. 42 A.G. DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Suspension of Income Tax Increase Not Surrender of Taxing Power of Legislature: Natelson collected enough petition signatures on an income tax increase passed by the Legislature to suspend the increase and refer it to the people for a vote. Nicholson filed suit, claiming that the suspension of the law constituted a surrender of the legislative power of taxation. The Supreme Court held that it would not apply case law from other states cited by the plaintiffs and that the referendum simply resulted in the suspension of one law by which the taxing power was exercised. The court also noted that in any event, as pointed out by the District Court, the state was still collecting taxes and would continue to do so no matter which law was ultimately effective after the vote of the people. Nicholson v. Cooney, 265 M 406, 877 P2d 486, 51 St. Rep. 579 (1994).

No Private Contract Created by Statute — State Prohibited From Surrendering Power to Tax: After the Legislature enacted Ch. 823, L. 1991, to tax retirement pension benefits that had previously been untaxed, the retirees sued, claiming that they had a contractual right to a continued exemption from taxation. Citing Wage Appeal v. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 208 M 33, 676 P2d 194 (1984), the Supreme Court held that the former tax exemption was only a policy statement that could be changed by the Legislature and that the Legislature did not clearly manifest an intention in the law in question to create a private contractual right. Additionally, the Supreme Court held that the state was prohibited by this section from promising any group of taxpayers that it would never tax them. Sheehy v. Pub. Employees Retirement Div., 262 M 129, 864 P2d 762, 50 St. Rep. 1477 (1993).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Foreign Corporation's Property: The Legislature has no power to release foreign corporation's property in state from taxes for county, municipal, and other purposes. St. v. N. Am. Car Corp., 118 M 183, 164 P2d 161 (1945).

"Owned or Used": Article XII, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const., authorized the state to tax "all corporations in this state, or doing business therein" on all "corporate property", including "personal property owned or used by them". Held, on appeal from a judgment and order perpetually enjoining the county and city from collecting an ad valorem tax levied on credits and receivables in the business of financing sales of motor vehicles, refrigerators, etc., showing annually earned net profits, that these intangibles have a business situs in Montana and are here taxable. Commercial Credit Co. v. O'Brien, 115 M 199, 146 P2d 637 (1943).

Exemption From Income Tax: The purpose of the introductory clause of Art. XII, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const., that the power to tax corporations shall never be relinquished or suspended, is to prevent the creation of corporations under laws whereby the right to tax corporations is either extinguished during their existence or suspended for a definite period of time. The action of the Legislature in failing to make corporations subject to the income tax law does not amount to a relinquishment or suspension of the right to tax them, within the meaning of this section. Mills v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 97 M 13, 33 P2d 563 (1934).

Cession of Park Land: Act Mont. Feb. 14, 1891 (L. 1891, p. 262), ceding to United States exclusive jurisdiction over Montana land included in Yellowstone Park, reserving only concurrent jurisdiction for execution of civil and criminal process lawfully issued by courts of state, held not violative of Art. XII, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const., declaring that power to tax corporations or corporate property shall never be relinquished or suspended. Yellowstone Park Transp. Co. v. Gallatin County, 31 F2d 644 (9th Cir. 1929).

Capital Stock: The authorized capital stock of a corporation is not taxable as such against the corporation. Butte Land & Inv. Co. v. Sheehan, 44 M 371, 120 P 241 (1911).

Trust Companies: Section 611 of the Civil Code of 1895 (now repealed), providing that the property of trust deposit and security corporations shall be assessed for purposes of taxation in the same manner as national banks, was repugnant to Art. XII, sec. 1 and 7, 1889 Mont. Const., in that it exempted the personal property of such companies from taxation. Daly Bank & Trust Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 33 M 101, 81 P 950 (1905).

Corporations to Bear Equal Share: The evident meaning of Art. XII, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const., is that the property of corporations shall bear its equal share of the burden of taxation. NW. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis & Clark County, 28 M 484, 72 P 982 (1903).

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Central Assessment of Statewide Telecommunications Network: A telecommunications company that owns cable within several counties and leases cable across county lines challenged central assessment on the grounds that the company does not qualify for central assessment and that the company's treatment violates equal protection under the Montana Constitution. The District Court ruled against the company and the Supreme Court affirmed on appeal. The Supreme Court explained that central assessment was appropriate because the company operated a functionally integrated network over a wide area and enjoyed a unity of use and management. The Supreme Court explained that the company failed to establish that it was unequally treated to a similarly situated party. Vision Net, Inc. v. St., 2019 MT 205, 397 Mont. 118, 447 P.3d 1034.

Six-Year Appraisal Cycle — No Violation of Equal Protection Rights When Property Value Significantly Decreases at Beginning of Cycle: The value of the taxpayer's property significantly declined in the year following its tax appraisal. After the Department of Revenue refused to conduct a midcycle reevaluation of the property, the taxpayer challenged the constitutionality of the 6-year tax cycle, arguing that the Department should conduct a midcycle reevaluation to relieve it from paying taxes based on an inflated value of the property and that the failure to do so subjected the taxpayer to disparate treatment in violation of its equal protection rights. The District Court agreed and ordered the Department to conduct a midcycle reevaluation. The Department appealed and the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that a 6-year cyclical plan of reappraisal does not violate a taxpayer's rights when the property depreciates in value during the cycle because the Montana Constitution requires only a periodic attainment of equality of tax treatment. The court also determined that the District Court had improperly exercised legislative authority in ordering the Department to conduct a reevaluation. Covenant Inv., Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 2013 MT 215, 371 Mont. 186, 308 P.3d 54.

Lack of Genuine Issue of Material Fact Concerning Failure to Equalize Valuation: The plaintiff claimed that tax valuations for its refinery were higher than for other refineries in Yellowstone County. The plaintiff alleged that the Department of Revenue had failed to equalize its valuation of the plaintiff's property in violation of Art. VIII, sec. 3, Mont. Const., and it brought an action under 15-1-406. However, the Department established that it used the same method of valuation for all three properties, and the plaintiff failed to establish any issues of material fact showing that the Department had acted illegally or improperly. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment for the Department on the claim, finding that the action was not within the scope of declaratory actions under 15-1-406 without first appealing to administrative tax appeal boards. CHS, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 2013 MT 100, 369 Mont. 505, 299 P.3d 813.

Equal Protection Analysis of Vocational-Technical School Levy — Rational Basis Test Applied: Plaintiffs challenged the constitutionality of 20-25-439, asserting that the tax levy for vocational-technical schools resulted in an unequal tax burden on five counties where the schools are located, even though the schools are part of the statewide University System. The state contended that the levy is not unconstitutional because it is rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. The District Court found that the levy is constitutional because it is rationally related to the legitimate government interest of supporting the schools, in that the schools provide specific benefits to their individual counties. The Supreme Court agreed that the rational basis analysis applied. The constitutional tax provisions in section 1 and this section are broad directives whose specifics are left to the Legislature, so no constitutionally significant interests are implicated that require greater than a rational basis analysis. A tax classification under the rational basis test will be upheld if it is reasonable and not arbitrary and if it applies equally to all who fall within the same classification. A classification is not reasonable if it confers particular privileges or imposes particular disabilities on a class of persons arbitrarily selected from a larger number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to privileges conferred or disabilities imposed. Neither the uniformity doctrine nor equal protection prevent the state from making classifications that result in different state taxes among the various counties as long as the classifications are rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. Simply because other state taxes for education funding are assessed in every county does not mean that the Legislature is prohibited from creating subclasses for tax purposes. Attendance at vocational-technical schools by local residents and course offerings related to local interests serve as a rational basis for putting the five counties in a separate class for purposes of the levy. Counties with vocational-technical schools are not arbitrarily selected from the rest of the state because those counties do not stand in the same relation to the greater privileges conferred on those counties by the schools than the rest of the state, so the disability of the levy is rationally imposed. The constitutionality of 20-25-439 was affirmed. Kottel v. St., 2002 MT 278, 312 M 387, 60 P3d 403 (2002), following Leuthold v. Brandjord, 100 M 96, 47 P2d 41 (1935), and distinguishing State ex rel. Woodahl v. Straub, 164 M 141, 520 P2d 776 (1974), Allegheny Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. County Comm'rs of Webster County, W. Va., 488 US 336 (1989), and Roosevelt v. Dept. of Revenue, 1999 MT 30, 293 M 240, 975 P2d 295 (1999).

Uniformity Doctrine of 1889 Constitution Embodied in Equal Protection Clause of 1972 Constitution: Plaintiffs challenged the constitutionality of 20-25-439, asserting that the tax levy for vocational-technical schools resulted in an unequal tax burden on five counties where the schools are located, even though the schools are part of the statewide University System. The state contended that the levy is not unconstitutional because it is rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. The 1889 Montana Constitution contained a uniformity doctrine that required a tax to be levied by a general law that is uniform within the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax; however, that uniformity doctrine does not appear in the plain language of the 1972 Montana Constitution. Nevertheless, plaintiffs asserted that the uniformity doctrine is still a constitutional requirement apart from equal protection guarantees. The state argued that because the uniformity doctrine is not part of the 1972 Montana Constitution, the levy could not be violative of the doctrine. The District Court agreed with the state and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the statement defining the uniformity doctrine in Hilger v. Moore, 56 M 146, 182 P 477 (1919), was subsequently applied in post-1972 cases, but disagreed that the definition supports any stricter limitation on taxation than that imposed by equal protection. The framers of the 1972 Montana Constitution intended to preserve the uniformity doctrine only as it is equivalent to equal protection requirements. Thus, the uniformity doctrine as interpreted under the 1889 Montana Constitution, which provided for equal protection in the area of taxation, is still embodied in the 1972 Montana Constitution in the equal protection clause. Analysis of the constitutionality of the levy in question was therefore conducted under the equal protection clause. Kottel v. St., 2002 MT 278, 312 M 387, 60 P3d 403 (2002).

Phasein of Real Property Value Modifications Violative of Equal Protection Rights: Roosevelt and the Department of Revenue filed a joint interlocutory petition to adjudicate issues raised before the State Tax Appeal Board, asking the District Court to determine whether the 2% phasein of changes in real property value in 15-7-111 violated the state constitution or statutes. Although the appraised value of Roosevelt's property declined by $161,757 in 1997, under 15-7-111, he was given credit for only a $3,235 difference and was assessed taxes based on a value of $817,362 rather than the actual 1997 appraised value of $658,840. In District Court, Roosevelt raised numerous alleged statutory and constitutional violations, including equal protection and due process concerns. The District Court held 15-7-111 unconstitutional on its face, in conflict with Art. VIII, sec. 7, Mont. Const., and this section with the equal protection and due process clauses of both the state and federal constitutions, and with statutes pertaining to the valuation and assessment of real property. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited U.S. v. Raines, 362 US 17, 4 L Ed 2d 524, 80 S Ct 519 (1960), in reversing the holding that the statute was unconstitutional on its face because even though it imposed different tax burdens on various classes of taxpayers, the statute was neutral on its face. However, the court did not find it necessary to address all other issues raised or decided by the District Court beyond the equal protection question. The court first noted that the level of scrutiny applicable to this case did not rise to the level of strict scrutiny, which requires a compelling state interest for statutory classifications that treat otherwise similarly situated persons differently and is reserved for situations when a statutory classification impermissibly interferes with the exercise of a fundamental right or operates to a peculiar disadvantage of a suspect class. Although a legitimate state interest exists in reducing reliance on property taxes and avoiding property tax increases, the method in 15-7-111, which taxed property owners, such as Roosevelt, based on 124% of market value while other taxpayers paid less than full market value, was not rationally related to a legitimate state interest, so the court declined to decide whether a higher level of scrutiny applied to classifications created for property tax assessment. Rather, the court held that creating a class of property owners whose taxes are assessed on a basis greater than the market values of their property, while other property owners are assessed on the actual or less than the actual market values of their property, causes the property owners in the first class to pay a disproportionate share of state taxes, in violation of the equal protection guarantee in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. General adjustments over a short time to equalize the treatment of similarly situated property holders is permissible, but seasonable attainment of the equality is required. The 2% phasein accomplished neither. In this case, Roosevelt and similarly situated taxpayers were entitled to be assessed at the actual 1997 market value of their property for purposes of calculating 1997 property taxes. (See changes to phase-in system in Ch. 584, L. 1999.) Roosevelt v. Dept. of Revenue, 1999 MT 30, 293 M 240, 975 P2d 295, 56 St. Rep. 125 (1999), following Allegheny Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. County Comm'rs of Webster County, W. Va., 488 US 336, 102 L Ed 2d 688, 109 S Ct 633 (1989), and distinguishing Nordlinger v. Hahn, 505 US 1, 120 L Ed 2d 1, 112 S Ct 2326 (1992).

Use of Single Approach to Estimating Market Value Not Required: The constitutional framers did not intend for equalization to require the use of a single approach to estimating market value. Rather, the framers anticipated and intended that the Department of Revenue could use a number of different approaches, including the income approach and the market data approach. The Department's method of assessing property and estimating market value is by no means perfect, but the interdisciplinary method is a reasonable attempt to equalize appraisal of real property, comports with the most modern and accurate appraisal practices available, and meets the constitutional requirement for equalization of property values. Albright v. St., 281 M 196, 933 P2d 815, 54 St. Rep. 132 (1997). See also Ostergren v. Dept. of Revenue, 2004 MT 30, 319 M 405, 85 P3d 738 (2004).

Constitutionality of Partial State Funding of County Assessors: Legislative funding of less than 100% of the salaries of County Assessors was not in conflict with this section despite the contention that the constitutional imposition on the state of the duty to appraise, assess, and equalize property valuations mandated that the state should fully fund Assessors' salaries. This section was adopted with a conscious choice of leaving to the Legislature the method of implementing the state's duties. Fallon County v. St., 231 M 443, 753 P2d 338, 45 St. Rep. 748 (1988).

Power to Uniformly Lower Appraisals of a Type of Property to Equalize Appraisals — "34% Cases": Due to the use of different appraisal manuals for residential property and commercial improvements to real property, equivalent values were not always placed upon similar properties although the two types of property are in the same tax class. The Department of Revenue determined that the commercial valuations averaged 12% higher than the residential valuations and ordered each county assessor to reduce all commercial valuations by 12%. The Department properly assumed the responsibility of solving the problem and in equalizing the valuations in the manner it did was acting under its constitutional mandate and authority to equalize values of taxable property. The 12% reduction did not constitute a reappraisal. The power and duty to equalize included the power to alter appraised values set at the beginning of an appraisal cycle. Hanley v. Dept. of Revenue, 207 M 302, 673 P2d 1257, 40 St. Rep. 2054 (1983).

Taxpayer Relief for Inequitable Assessment: To obtain relief on the ground that his property is assessed inequitably, it is essential that the taxpayer prove: (1) that there are several other properties within a reasonable area comparable to his; (2) the amount of assessments on these properties; (3) the actual value of the comparable properties; (4) the actual value of his property; (5) the assessment complained of; and (6) that by comparison his property is assessed at a higher proportion of its actual value than are the comparable properties, thereby creating discriminations. These criteria are among those to be used in a comparison of true value to assessed value ratios. Where no such criteria were followed and no ratio comparisons made, the State Tax Appeal Board's blanket reduction of 34% on commercial improvement appraisals was set aside. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 188 M 244, 613 P2d 691 (1980), followed in Devoe v. Dept. of Revenue, 233 M 190, 759 P2d 991, 45 St. Rep. 1414 (1988).

Taxation Standards — Uniformity Versus True Value: Where it is impossible to secure both the standard of the true value of a taxpayer's property and the uniformity and equality in taxation required by law, the latter requirement is to be preferred as the just and ultimate purpose of the law. Therefore, unequal appraisals may be reduced even though they result in an assessment as true market value or 100% of market value as required by 15-8-111. Reduction is required where it is satisfactorily shown that under the system as applied, it is impossible to meet both the true value and equality standards. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 188 M 244, 613 P2d 691 (1980).

Late Assessments: Section 15-8-201 implements Art. VIII, sec. 3, Mont. Const., and requires that assessments be made by the second Monday in July. Assessments made after the second Monday in July are invalid. Butte Country Club v. Dept. of Revenue, 186 M 424, 608 P2d 111 (1980), overruled in Albright v. St., 281 M 196, 933 P2d 815, 54 St. Rep. 132 (1997).

Montana Appraisal Plan: The Montana appraisal plan and its implementing legislation are constitutional. Patterson v. Dept. of Revenue, 171 M 168, 557 P2d 798 (1976).

Montana Appraisal Plan — Violation of Administrative Procedure Act: The Montana appraisal plan was voided because it was never legally adopted in accordance with the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. Patterson v. Dept. of Revenue, 171 M 168, 557 P2d 798 (1976).

Determination of Accounting Method: This section when taken together with 15-9-101 allows the Department of Revenue to determine what method of valuation shall be used for tax assessment purposes. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975).

Powers of Former State Board of Equalization:

That an order of the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) prescribing a uniform method of appraising timberlands may not have been supported by the evidence adduced at a hearing does not give the counties ground for ignoring the order until such time as the order has been adjudicated invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction. State ex rel. Conrad v. Managhan, 157 M 335, 485 P2d 948 (1971).

When the Board held "show cause hearings" to afford opportunity to protest Board's order of uniform county land value reclassification but provided no opportunity to cross-examine witnesses or hear evidence and no stenographic record was kept of the proceedings, such hearings did not fulfill the requirements of due process and uniformity. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Kovich, 142 M 201, 383 P2d 818 (1963).

The Board has the power to determine what a particular class should include. Yellowstone Pipe Line Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 138 M 603, 358 P2d 55 (1960).

Board is charged with the duty of adjusting and equalizing the valuation of all taxable property among the several counties and between individual taxpayers. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 134 M 128, 328 P2d 634 (1958).

Increased Valuation: State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) directive to county officials requiring use of certain valuations on grades of farm land for subsequent years was enforceable by mandamus since the Board had not only powers of adjustment, equalization, and supervision over assessors under Art. XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., and 15-2-201 but also the power to issue directives for those purposes. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Koch, 145 M 474, 401 P2d 765 (1965).

Uniformity of Taxation:

As long as the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) treats property of similar nature and productivity the same, it cannot be said that the constitutional mandate of uniformity is not subserved. Yellowstone Pipe Line Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 138 M 603, 358 P2d 55 (1960).

Under the 1889 Montana Constitution the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) had the power, in adjusting and equalizing taxation between oil pipelines and other properties, i.e., town and city lots, to recognize pipelines as a class in itself and still not violate the requirement of uniformity. Yellowstone Pipe Line Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 138 M 603, 358 P2d 55 (1960).

Writ of Prohibition — Intervention of Court: District Court acted prematurely in issuing Writ prohibiting State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) from proceeding further under 15-9-101(2), holding a public hearing, and equalizing or increasing the assessed values of farmlands in county, which prevented Board from discharging its constitutional duties. Court may not intervene where action of Board was not arbitrary, fraudulent, or contrary to law. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 134 M 128, 328 P2d 634 (1958).

Prohibition of Discrimination: Article XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., as amended (L. 1923), conferring broad powers upon the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) in the matter of adjusting, equalizing, changing, increasing, or decreasing valuations of property for taxation purposes, impliedly prohibits the Board from intentionally discriminating in favor of one county against another or between the different classes of property in any county or in favor of one individual and against another. State ex rel. Schoonover v. Stewart, 89 M 257, 297 P 476 (1931).

Power of Legislature to Add Powers to Board of Equalization: Held, that the Legislature could properly add powers additional to those specifically conferred by Art. XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., upon the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board), as it did by Ch. 237, L. 1921 (15-23-502 through 15-23-522), by imposing upon the Board the duty to assess net proceeds of mines. Butte & Superior Min. Co. v. McIntyre, 71 M 254, 229 P 730 (1924).

Net Proceeds of Mines: The State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) is a special tribunal with limited powers and must, in making an assessment of net proceeds of mines, pursue the method of procedure prescribed by Ch. 237, L. 1921 (15-23-502 through 15-23-522). In it is lodged no discretion to permit deductions from the gross proceeds other than those specifically provided for or to allow reimbursement to the taxpayer for taxes paid by him by mistake in previous years. Mandamus lies to compel the Board to follow the law. State ex rel. Bourquin v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 67 M 340, 215 P 667 (1923).

Increase of Total Valuation — State Property: The State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) has no power to increase the total valuation of the property of the state as disclosed and fixed by the abstracts and statements transmitted to it by the assessors and County Boards of Equalization (now County Tax Appeal Boards). State ex rel. Wallace v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 18 M 473, 46 P 266 (1896).

Municipal Levy Based on County and State Assessment: Under Art. XII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., the municipal authorities of an incorporated city could make a legal assessment in electing to take the assessment made by the county and state assessing authorities as the basis for the levy of municipal taxes on property within such city. The levy of lawful taxes thereon by that city for municipal purposes, according to the provisions of its charter and ordinances, constituted a legal levy. Lockey v. Walker, 12 M 577, 31 P 639 (1892).

Section 5. Property tax exemptions.

Convention Notes

1889 constitution makes it mandatory that all property listed in subsection (1)(a) be exempt from taxation. Revision leaves all exemptions at discretion of legislature. GENERAL

Execution of Assets — Alleged Abuse of Process, Wrongful Levy, and Conversion — Improper Dismissal of Complaint: The plaintiffs owed a judgment debt to the defendants. After the plaintiffs had filed a notice of claimed exemptions and requested a hearing, the defendants secured a warrant of execution and had sheriff's officials remove the contents of the plaintiffs' home. The plaintiffs ultimately filed an action against the defendants for a variety of violations of their rights related to the seizure of their property, most of which was exempt from execution. The District Court dismissed the complaint, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the District Court had erred in dismissing the claims of abuse of process, wrongful levy, and conversion. The Supreme Court concluded that certain facts alleged by the plaintiffs, if proved, would entitle them to relief. Salminen v. Morrison & Frampton, PLLP, 2014 MT 323, 377 Mont. 244, 339 P.3d 602.

Absent Equal Protection Violation, No Constitutional Violation for Legislature to Tax or Exempt From Taxation Property Without First Classifying Property: Certain counties and individual taxpayers argued that statutes enacted to tax coal, oil, and natural gas while at the same time exempting those properties from a statewide mill levy for education were invalid because the statutes did not classify those properties as required by 15-6-101 and, in addition, created a partial exemption from school funding instead of creating a total exemption. The Supreme Court held that the Legislature is not constitutionally limited to a classification system and that the Legislature is not constitutionally limited to providing tax exemptions for property exclusively within a classification system. Powder River County v. St., 2002 MT 259, 312 M 198, 60 P3d 357 (2002).

Tax Exemption for Business Inventory While Taxing Livestock Not Violative of State or Federal Equal Protection Laws: The Supreme Court reversed a lower court decision that held that taxing livestock while exempting business inventories was unconstitutional in that the law denied certain individuals equal protection under the federal and state constitutions. The Supreme Court ruled that a middle tier scrutiny was not required; rather the proper test was a rational basis test to determine if there was a basis for treating inventory and livestock differently. Under the rational basis test, it was clear that the Legislature had acted rationally in applying different classifications, and historically the two properties had been treated differently. Mont. Stockgrowers Ass'n v. St., 238 M 113, 777 P2d 285, 46 St. Rep. 1132 (1989).

FEDERAL PROPERTY

Private Interest in Federal Property Taxable: The appellants were investor-owned utility companies that used portions of federally owned power lines located in Montana to transmit electrical power to out-of-state users. The companies argued that their interest in the power lines did not give them the right to possession and control and therefore was not an interest that was subject to a beneficial use tax. The Supreme Court disagreed, stating that what was involved was a private contractual right to use a portion of the transmission capacity of the exempt federal power line. The contract right clearly fit into the state constitutional language establishing that any private interest in property may be taxed separately. Pac. Power & Light Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 237 M 77, 773 P2d 1176, 46 St. Rep. 636 (1989).

When United States Owns Equitable Title, Land Not Taxable: When United States acquired option to purchase privately owned land and exercised its option and took possession of the land prior to first Monday of March and deed to the government was executed and delivered the following November, the government was the equitable and beneficial owner on the tax date and the property was exempt from taxation by the county. Calvin v. Custer County, 111 M 162, 107 P2d 134 (1940).

Real Property Purchased With Exempt United States Pension: It was within the power of the Legislature to declare it the policy of the state, based upon an admissible construction of the federal statutes in that behalf, that title to the funds received from the United States as pension, etc., after their delivery to the guardian should remain in the United States and that the benefit of such statutes should extend to real property purchased with such funds. Henderson v. Missoula, 106 M 596, 79 P2d 547 (1938).

United States Property — Indian Property: The general provision of the Constitution that property of the United States is exempt from taxation is controlled by the special provisions of ordinance No. 1, that lands granted to an Indian by act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation only so long as Congress may not otherwise prescribe. British-American Oil Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 101 M 293, 54 P2d 129 (1936).

United States Bonds Exempt: Property of a state bank represented by bonds of the United States is exempt from taxation under the supreme law of the land, irrespective of the fact that it is not made so by the state Constitution or statutes. E. Helena St. Bank v. Rogers, 73 M 210, 236 P 1090 (1925), overruled on other grounds in Mont. Nat'l Bank v. Yellowstone County, 78 M 62, 252 P 876 (1926).

Special Assessments Taxes — Exemptions Cover: Special assessments are within the meaning of the Constitution when it prohibits imposition by the Legislature of taxes upon any property or instrumentality of the federal government. Ford v. Great Falls, 46 M 292, 127 P 1004 (1912).

STATE PROPERTY

Special Assessment Not Taxes: The Legislature may authorize the inclusion of state-owned land within special improvement districts or drainage districts and authorize assessments to the extent that the land is benefited. Such assessments are not taxes within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition. However, in the absence of clear legislative consent thereto, such land cannot be subjected to tax deed proceedings for delinquency of assessments. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Yellowstone County, 108 M 21, 88 P2d 6 (1939).

Irrigation District Assessments Not Taxes: Assessments for irrigation district purposes, in their nature akin to special assessments for local improvements, are not "taxes" within the meaning of Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., declaring that state property shall be exempt from taxation, and state-owned lands within the district are subject to assessments levied by the district for district purposes. Toole County Irrigation District v. St., 104 M 420, 67 P2d 989 (1937).

Payment Under Protest: Taxes paid by the state under protest on the value in excess of the equity the purchaser had in the land were illegally levied as upon state property. Courtney v. Missoula County, 21 M 591, 55 P 359 (1898), distinguished in St. v. Lewis & Clark County, 84 M 200, 274 P 854 (1929).

State Land Being Sold, Subject to Taxation: State lands, after sale but before the price is fully paid, are subject to taxation as the property of the purchaser, notwithstanding Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Courtney v. Missoula County, 21 M 591, 55 P 359 (1898).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Trust Property: Provision for taxing property in which county or municipality has only a trust interest as opposed to a beneficial interest did not violate Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., since taxation of property is based on its use. Fickes v. Missoula County, 155 M 258, 470 P2d 287 (1970).

Irrigation Districts Not Municipal Corporations, Hence Not Exempt: An irrigation district is not a "municipal corporation" within the meaning of the 1889 Montana Constitution. Therefore, the county in which such a district was located had the power to assess and levy a tax upon lands acquired by the district by tax deed. Buffalo Rapids Irrigation District v. Colleran, 85 M 466, 279 P 369 (1929).

County Property Special Improvement Taxes: When a city lot owned by the county is not used for county purposes and special municipal improvements enhance its value for building purposes, the county is liable for the payment of the consequent special assessments. Constitutional and statutory provisions exempting its property from taxation did not apply under such conditions. State ex rel. Great Falls v. Jeffries, 83 M 111, 270 P 638 (1928).

Property Willed to Town for Public Purpose Exempt: A mortgagee bequeathed a sum of money and a mortgage on land for town library purposes. The will provided that the trust fund thus created should be administered by trustees for the use and benefit of the town. The mortgagor in lieu of foreclosure gave a deed for the property to the trustees of the town—the cestui que trust. The property became that of the town and not that of the trust and was therefore exempt from taxation under Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Cascade v. Cascade County, 75 M 304, 243 P 806 (1926).

PUBLIC PROPERTY

Property and Securities of Housing Authority: The property and securities of a housing authority are essentially public property used for public purposes and were expressly exempted from taxation by Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Rutherford v. Great Falls, 107 M 512, 86 P2d 656 (1939).

Public Corporation Not Exempt: The property of a public corporation may not be declared exempt from taxation unless it is made exempt by virtue of express pronouncement of the Montana Constitution or legislative declaration permitted by the Constitution. Buffalo Rapids Irrigation District v. Colleran, 85 M 466, 279 P 369 (1929).

Express Exemption of Public Property: It was not the intention of the framers of the Montana Constitution to write into the fundamental law any useless or meaningless phrases. The fact that they declared an exemption from taxation in favor of public property is a recognition of the principle that, without such express exemption, that property would be subject to taxation, along with the property of the private individuals, corporations, and others. Kalispell v. School District, 45 M 221, 122 P 742 (1912).

EDUCATIONAL PROPERTY

Exemption of Church Camp — Educational Purposes — Status of Religious Education: When church summer camp, containing 22 acres of land and 28 improvements, was "used exclusively for educational purposes", it was therefore exempt from taxation. Religious education is exempt as an "educational purpose" and not as "actual religious worship" even though elements of the latter may be present and may serve to strengthen the exemption of all the property. Flathead Lake Methodist Camp v. Webb, 144 M 565, 399 P2d 90 (1965).

Property Leased for School Purposes: Under Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., ownership of the property is of no importance. It is exempt from taxation if it is used exclusively for educational purposes. NW. Improvement Co. v. Rosebud County, 129 M 412, 288 P2d 657 (1955).

Educational Exemption — Purpose: The purpose of exempting from taxation property used exclusively for educational purposes was to promote and encourage the cause of education. NW. Improvement Co. v. Rosebud County, 129 M 412, 288 P2d 657 (1955).

CHARITABLE OR RELIGIOUS PROPERTY

Tax Exemption for Undeveloped Property Adjacent to Church Buildings — Application of Doctrine of Strict Construction of Tax Exemptions: Where the plaintiff church owned land, adjacent to the church, that was used for a church road and recreational activities of church members, the District Court erred, in a quiet title action brought by the church, in denying a tax exemption for the land actually used for the road providing access to the church. However, as there was no direct evidence of the use for church purposes of the other undeveloped property adjacent to the road and church, the Supreme Court strictly construed the tax exemption laws to deny an exemption for the other undeveloped property. Old Fashion Baptist Church v. Dept. of Revenue, 206 M 451, 671 P2d 625, 40 St. Rep. 1774 (1983).

Charitable Exemption — Home for Aged Persons: Nonprofit foundation operating home for aged was entitled to tax exemption under statute granting a tax exemption to institutions of purely public charity, notwithstanding evidence that the foundation charged fees, imposed admission requirements, and maintained a high standard of care and notwithstanding argument that amendment to statute, specifically including homes for aged, was unlawful attempt by Legislature to expand exemption allowed by Constitution. Deaconess Foundation v. Ford, 151 M 143, 439 P2d 915 (1968).

Charitable Exemption — Extent of Exemption: When exempting an institution of charity, sufficient residence and recreation area may also be exempt. Flathead Lake Methodist Camp v. Webb, 144 M 565, 399 P2d 90 (1965).

Charitable Exemption — Limits on Institution: An institution of purely public charity that is exempt from taxation may be devoted to bringing people under religious influence, the beneficiaries of the charity may pay a small portion of the cost, and the activity may be limited to a particular class so long as the numbers who may participate remain somewhat indefinite. Flathead Lake Methodist Camp v. Webb, 144 M 565, 399 P2d 90 (1965).

Corporate License Tax on Organization of Church Society: The corporate license tax imposed on the agricultural activities of a religious society formed for the purposes of farming, stock growing, and other branches of agriculture does not conflict with constitutional provisions relating to religious freedom. St. v. King Colony Ranch, 137 M 145, 350 P2d 841 (1960).

Charitable Use — Exclusive Devotion Required: Only property that is devoted exclusively to a charitable use can be exempt from taxation. Catholic Missions v. Lewis & Clark County, 13 M 559, 35 P 2 (1893).

MISCELLANEOUS

Property Tax Exemptions Under 1889 Constitution: At the time 15-6-206 was enacted (1965), there was in effect Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., which provided that only the property specifically mentioned therein could be the subject of an exemption. The claimed exemption for agricultural irrigation equipment did not fall within this category. Accordingly, the Legislature could not constitutionally grant an exemption to the taxpayers. Bucher v. Powell County, 180 M 145, 589 P2d 660 (1979).

"Exclusive Use" Defined: The words "exclusive use" consistently have been held to mean the primary and inherent use and not the mere secondary or incidental uses of the property. Flathead Lake Methodist Camp v. Webb, 144 M 565, 399 P2d 90 (1965).

Exemption for Personal Property Prohibited: Laws which purported to levy a tax on real property only, thus exempting all personal property, is unconstitutional as violating constitutional provision that all property be taxed for any public purpose excepting only such property as set forth and mentioned in Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Schladweiler v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 131 M 13, 306 P2d 673 (1957).

Provisions Absolute and Self-Executing: The property of the United States, the states, counties, cities, towns, school districts, municipal corporations, and public libraries were absolutely exempt from taxation under Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., regardless of question of exclusive use. Colwell v. Great Falls, 117 M 126, 157 P2d 1013 (1945), overruled on other grounds in Prezeau v. Whitefish, 198 M 416, 646 P2d 1186 (1982).

Mortgages — Extent of Power of Legislature to Exempt: Under the power granted it by the Montana Constitution, the Legislature could exempt mortgages to the full extent or in part or decline to exempt at all. Bank of Miles City v. Custer County, 93 M 291, 19 P2d 885 (1933).

Strict Construction of Exemptions — Provision Not Limited to Land: The constitutional provision prescribing what property is exempt from taxation was broad enough to include every kind of property—real, personal and mixed—capable of private ownership. Section prescribing the property that shall be absolutely exempt from taxation and the class that may be exempt if exclusively used for certain designated purposes must be strictly construed. Therefore, the contention that, under a strict construction, it must be construed as meaning the unqualified ownership of land merely has no merit. Cascade v. Cascade County, 75 M 304, 243 P 806 (1926).

"Property" Defined: State and county bonds held in private ownership within the state are "property" within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution and revenue laws of the state and, not being declared exempt, are taxable as such. Cruse v. Fischl, 55 M 258, 175 P 878 (1918).

Provisions Mandatory and Self-Executing — Power of Legislature: The provisions of Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., were mandatory in character and self-executing and deny the Legislature authority to tax any property of the class therein specified. The Legislature may extend the exemption to the property enumerated in this section, but it cannot go further or include any other. Cruse v. Fischl, 55 M 258, 175 P 878 (1918).

Exemptions Exclusive: As the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, the enumerations in Art. XII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., were exclusive of any other. Daly Bank & Trust Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 33 M 101, 81 P 950 (1905).

Attorney General's Opinions

School District Not Exempt From Payment of Solid Waste Management District Assessments: This section authorizes the Legislature to exempt state property from taxation, and 15-6-201 exempts school district property from taxation. However, taxation does not generally include special assessments or user fees. The purpose of a solid waste management district assessment is to recoup the costs of providing infrastructure and services that directly and tangibly benefit affected properties, not to raise general revenue or fund other programs. Therefore, solid waste management district assessments are not considered taxes within the meaning of 15-6-201. School district properties are not exempt from paying reasonable solid waste management fees that do not exceed the cost of waste management services. 48 A.G. Op. 21 (2000). See also 46 A.G. Op. 7 (1995).

No Authority for Self-Governing City to Assess Fire Service Fees to State Property Within Fire Service Area: The city of Helena, a self-governing city, is precluded from assessing fire service fees to state property located in the city fire service area because the fees are a tax for services provided for the general public good, and thus prohibited by 15-6-201(1)(a)(ii), rather than an assessment commensurate with a specific benefit conferred on the assessed property. 46 A.G. Op. 7 (1995).

Section 6. Highway revenue non-diversion.

Convention Notes

Revises 1956 amendment to the 1889 constitution by removing motor vehicle registration fees from the earmarking provision; by including local government road and street systems, highway safety programs and driver education programs as permissible uses of earmarked funds; and by allowing the legislature by a three-fifths vote to divert the earmarked funds to other purposes.

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Payment of Special Assessments: Use of highway trust funds derived essentially from motor vehicle license fees and gasoline taxes to pay assessment levied against property owned or leased by Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) and located within flood control and drainage district was proper, and such use did not violate Art. XII, sec. 1(b), 1889 Mont. Const. Highway Comm'n v. Flood Control & Drainage District, 155 M 157, 468 P2d 753 (1970).

Appropriation to Park Fund: Deposit of 1% gasoline tax revenues into park fund as provided by statute did not violate antidiversion amendment of Constitution in the absence of proof that legislative finding that not less than 1% of all gasoline sold is consumed by motorboats is erroneous and in absence of proof that all motor fuel taxes resulting from use of vehicles on public highways are not expended on public highways. Harvey v. Blewett, 151 M 427, 443 P2d 902 (1968).

Section 7. Tax appeals.

Convention Notes

New provision requiring the legislature to establish procedures for taxpayer appeals. Appeal procedures must include an opportunity to have the complaint heard at the local level.

Former Constitutional Provision: This section is similar to Art. XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const.

Authority of State Tax Appeal Board to Independently Assess Taxpayer's Market Value in Excess of Department of Revenue's Original Assessment: Puget Sound Energy appealed the Department of Revenue's final ad valorem assessment of Puget to the State Tax Appeal Board (STAB). STAB, concluding the Department erred, assessed Puget's value in excess of the Department's assessment. Puget petitioned the District Court for review, arguing STAB lacked authority to adopt an assessment that exceeded the Department's original assessment and violated Puget's due process rights. The District Court agreed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court. Appeals to STAB, in accordance with Art. VIII, sec. 7, Mont. Const., differ depending on whether the appeal is from the county tax appeal board, pursuant to 15-2-301, or is brought directly from a Department decision, pursuant to 15-2-302. Because Puget appealed directly, STAB was the factfinding tribunal and had authority to adopt assessments in excess of the Department's original assessments. Section 15-8-111(1) mandates that all property must be assessed at 100% of its market value and applies equally to the Department and to STAB. Department error does not create an exception for STAB to assess a taxpayer's property at less than 100% of its market value. Puget's due process claim lacked merit, as it placed the determination of ultimate market value before STAB. Puget Sound Energy, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 2011 MT 141, 361 Mont. 39, 255 P.3d 171.

Unconstitutional Provision Disallowing Appeal of Yearly Property Tax Percentage Adjustments: The provisions of 15-7-102 prohibiting a property owner from appealing the yearly percentage adjustments made as the result of the sales assessment ratio study, the stratum, or area designations are an unconstitutional violation of this section, which provides independent appeal procedures for taxpayer grievances. (The offensive provisions were subsequently deleted by 1991 amendment of 15-7-102.) Dept. of Revenue v. Barron, 245 M 100, 799 P2d 533, 47 St. Rep. 1869 (1990).

Appellate Review of Appraisal Methods: Section 15-7-102 gives the State Tax Appeal Board specific power to hear tax appraisal appeals, including the power to pass judgment on appraisal methods. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 188 M 244, 613 P2d 691 (1980).

Taxpayer Relief for Inequitable Assessment: To obtain relief on the ground that his property is assessed inequitably, it is essential that the taxpayer prove: (1) that there are several other properties within a reasonable area comparable to his; (2) the amount of assessments on these properties; (3) the actual value of the comparable properties; (4) the actual value of his property; (5) the assessment complained of; and (6) that by comparison his property is assessed at a higher proportion of its actual value than are the comparable properties, thereby creating discriminations. These criteria are among those to be used in a comparison of true value to assessed value ratios. Where no such criteria were followed and no ratio comparisons made, the State Tax Appeal Board's blanket reduction of 34% on commercial improvement appraisals was set aside. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 188 M 244, 613 P2d 691 (1980), followed in Devoe v. Dept. of Revenue, 233 M 190, 759 P2d 991, 45 St. Rep. 1414 (1988).

Taxation Standards — Uniformity Versus True Value: Where it is impossible to secure both the standard of the true value of a taxpayer's property and the uniformity and equality in taxation required by law, the latter requirement is to be preferred as the just and ultimate purpose of the law. Therefore, unequal appraisals may be reduced even though they result in an assessment at true market value or 100% of market value as required by 15-8-111. Reduction is required where it is satisfactorily shown that, under the system as applied, it is impossible to meet both the true value and equality standards. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 188 M 244, 613 P2d 691 (1980).

Appeal to Local Board Exclusive Remedy — Late Assessment Precluding Hearing: The Montana Legislature determined that the County Tax Appeal Board provides the review procedure at the local government unit level mandated by Art. VIII, sec. 7, Mont. Const. An appeal and review before the local Board is a condition precedent to a State Tax Appeal Board review. Except in cases where fraud or the adoption of a fundamentally wrong principle of assessment is shown, an appeal to the local Board is the exclusive remedy granted the taxpayer. If a taxpayer is denied a hearing before the local Board because of a late assessment, the assessment is invalid because it denies the taxpayer a constitutional right to a hearing before the local Board. Butte Country Club v. Dept. of Revenue, 186 M 424, 608 P2d 111 (1980), followed in Boehm v. Nelson, 229 M 452, 747 P2d 213, 44 St. Rep. 2127 (1987), and overruled in Albright v. St., 281 M 196, 933 P2d 815, 54 St. Rep. 132 (1997).

Division of Powers of State Board of Equalization: State Tax Appeal Board has the power to conduct trials de novo on appeals from the Department of Revenue in the absence of promulgated administrative rules and regulations covering the tax matter where the State Tax Appeal Board is of the opinion firsthand knowledge of all facts is necessary, as the Department of Revenue received the administrative powers of the State Board of Equalization while the appellate powers of the State Board of Equalization were transferred to the State Tax Appeal Board. Because of the presumption the Legislature knows the law as then enacted, the Legislature must have intended the State Tax Appeal Board have the use of the oath and contempt powers of 15-2-201 according to 15-2-301. To do so, the State Tax Appeal Board must be able to take additional testimony and receive additional evidence, according to the presumption "legislature does not perform useless acts". Dept. of Revenue v. Burlington N., Inc., 169 M 202, 545 P2d 1083 (1976).

When Aggrieved Taxpayer May Resort to Courts: The State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) in a hearing on appeal to it involving a tax matter acts in a quasi-judicial capacity, and the presumption obtains that its findings were justified by the evidence taken at the hearing. An aggrieved taxpayer may resort to the courts for review if he can show fraud or other unlawful acts, such as arbitrary increase of valuation, wrong principle of assessment, or error so gross as to be inconsistent with any honest exercise of judgment. If his complaint is not so predicated it does not state a cause of action. Int'l Business Mach. Corp. v. Lewis & Clark County, 111 M 384, 112 P2d 477 (1941).

Supervision of County Assessors: Under Art. XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) has supervisory power over the acts of County Assessors and County Boards of Equalization (now County Tax Appeal Boards) and is authorized to increase or decrease valuations of property for taxation purposes. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Jacobson, 107 M 461, 86 P2d 9 (1938).

Review of Decisions of Board: The decision of the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board) made after hearing the appeal of a taxpayer from an adverse ruling of a County Board of Equalization (now County Tax Appeal Board) is quasi-judicial. On application for Writ of Certiorari, the Supreme Court may not go back of the record made by the State Board, the presumption obtaining that its findings were justified by the testimony heard by it at the hearing. State ex rel. Schoonover v. Stewart, 89 M 257, 297 P 476 (1931).

Attorney General's Opinions

Independent Appeals Procedure Required: In order to provide independent taxpayer appeal procedures, County Commissioners cannot appoint themselves to the County Tax Appeal Boards. 35 A.G. Op. 16 (1973).

DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Bonded Debt — Not Invalid as Continuing Appropriation: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The bonds would be financed by coal severance taxes to provide proceeds for development of state water resources. Plaintiff contended that this was an invalid "continuing appropriation". Plaintiff contended that the 48th Legislature by enacting the program could not constitutionally bind future Legislatures to "appropriate" the coal tax money necessary to service the bonds; that the principal of the coal severance tax trust funds had been invaded for years; and that each bond issue requires a separate appropriation of coal severance tax revenues by a three-fourths vote of each house of the Legislature. The Supreme Court harmonized the various constitutional provisions involved. The court held that the Legislature can authorize long-term borrowing by issuing and selling bonds and can provide for the servicing for such indebtedness by repayment or refunding. The court found nothing making the coal severance tax trust fund immune from use as a source of funding for long-term state bonds. When the Legislature validly acts to establish a debt, that indebtedness becomes a state obligation extending over the life of the indebtedness, and every succeeding legislative assembly has an unavoidable duty to provide for it in the manner required by the authorizing law. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Housing Act of 1975 Not "State Debt": The Legislature did not intend to create a state debt in this act. The language of the act is permissive in its direction to the Legislature, and the enacting Legislature did not bind a future Legislature to appropriate money. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976).

CREATION BY LEGISLATURE

No Requirement of Time Limit: Article XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., did not require that the Legislature set a time limit on a debt. It merely required that irrevocable and irrepealable law be passed providing for the levy of a tax sufficient to pay the interest and extinguish the principal of the debt within the time limited by law. Where there was no specific time limited by law and the law was made irrepealable until the debt and interest have been extinguished, the constitutional mandate had been met. State ex rel. Graham v. Bd. of Examiners, 125 M 419, 239 P2d 283 (1952).

Aviation Gasoline Tax Regulatory Rather Than Revenue Measure: Practical operation of the aviation gasoline tax placed burden of paying 1 cent per gallon tax on user of gasoline for aviation purposes. Because income generated is used to regulate aviation operators it was clearly a regulatory, not a revenue measure, and as such was not subject to constitutional provisions relating to taxation. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948), overruled on other grounds in Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975).

Erection of Dormitories: Held, by this case, that Ch. 94, L. 1929 (section 75-201, et seq., R.C.M. 1947, now repealed), does not violate Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., prescribing how state indebtedness shall be created by the Legislature and placing a limitation upon the amount thereof without submitting the question to the people at a general election. The scheme of financing the erection of dormitories at educational institutions provided for making the obligations incurred payable out of the rents from the contemplated dormitories and from income derived from gifts and bequests. The act specifically provided that no obligation created by the board should ever become a charge against the state. State ex rel. Veeder v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 121, 33 P2d 516 (1934); Barbour v. St. Bd. of Education, 92 M 321, 13 P2d 225 (1932).

Requirements for Creation of State Debt: When a debt is sought to be created for state purposes it must, under Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., be by a law which shall be irrepealable until the obligation is fully discharged, which law shall specify a single purpose to which the funds so raised shall be applied and provide for the levy of a tax sufficient to pay the interest on and extinguish the principal of the debt within the time limited for the payment thereof. Herrin v. Erickson, 90 M 259, 2 P2d 296 (1931), overruled on other grounds in Nordquist v. Ford, 112 M 278, 114 P2d 1071 (1941).

State Indebtedness Payable Out of Special Fund: The rule that when contemplated state indebtedness represented by bonds is made payable out of a special fund, its creation is not in violation of the constitutional limitation was applicable to the funds to be raised under the gasoline license tax, they being state funds raised by one of the constitutional methods of raising public revenue, the license system, which the state may make payable into the general fund and devote to any public purpose desired. State ex rel. Diederichs v. St. Highway Comm'n, 89 M 205, 296 P 1033 (1931).

BONDS

Issuance of Bonds: Issuance of bonds to be repaid from proceeds of income tax, corporation license tax, tobacco tax, and gasoline tax would create a liability, if not a debt, within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., and the bonds must be approved by a vote of the people before they may be issued. State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 868 (1971), distinguishing Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958).

"Debt or Liability" — Issuance of Bonds: Issuance of bonds to be repaid from proceeds of income tax, corporate license tax, tobacco tax, and gasoline tax would create either a "debt or liability". Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958), overruled in State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 868 (1971).

Capitol Building Refunding Bonds: Held, that the contemplated issuance of Capitol building refunding bonds under authority of Ch. 133, L. 1939 (omitted), to redeem bonds held by the state Board of Land Commissioners does not create a debt within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring submission of the question to the voters. Lodge v. Ayers, 108 M 527, 91 P2d 691 (1939).

Validity of Bonds — Interim of Possible Referendum of Creative Act: Where state bonds are sold before the expiration of 6 months after adjournment of the Legislature, within which period the creative act is subject to action by the people on referendum, during which period the act is attacked as unconstitutional but found valid, and the act is "still in full force and effect" within the terms of Art. V, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., the bonds are subsisting obligations of the state, since to hold otherwise would in effect declare that a state debt once created does not have the benefit of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Lodge v. Ayers, 108 M 527, 91 P2d 691 (1939).

Bonds Payable From Works Constructed: Held, that the issuance of bonds authorized by Title 85, ch. 1, does not create a debt of the state in excess of the limitation prescribed in this provision, in view of the provision of Title 85, ch. 1, part 3, that all bonds shall contain a statement that they shall not constitute a state debt or liability and are made payable only from revenues derived from the works constructed. State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935).

Buildings at State Normal School: Chapter 7, Ex. L. 1933-34 (omitted), by authorizing the State Board of Education to erect buildings at the state normal school at a cost not to exceed $250,000 and to finance the project by an issue of bonds, held not invalid as running counter to the provisions of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the creation of a state debt in excess of $100,000 without submitting the question to the electors of the state. Under its provisions the entire principal and interest on the bonds are payable out of sources other than taxation, and the bonds shall not be or become the obligations of the state. State ex rel. Blume v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 371, 34 P2d 515 (1934). See also Willett v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 112 M 317, 115 P2d 287 (1941).

State Educational Bond: Upon the sale of the state educational bonds under the provisions of Initiative Measure No. 19, the duty to levy and collect for their payment a tax on the assessed value of all taxable property in the state became an obligation of the contract between the state and the holders of such bonds, which under Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., was beyond the power of the Legislature to impair by passage of Ch. 158, L. 1923 (omitted as unconstitutional), in effect providing that where a statute authorizes the imposition of a tax, its basis shall be the taxable and not the assessed or true value of such property. State ex rel. Judd v. Cooney, 97 M 75, 32 P2d 851 (1934).

Funding Outstanding Warrants: Chapter 10, L. 1933 (omitted), authorizing the issuance and sale of bonds for purpose of funding outstanding registered warrants held not to create a debt within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the creation of state debt in excess of $100,000 without the approval of the electors, the contemplated issue being no more than the issuance of a new evidence of an existing debt. State ex rel. Tipton v. Erickson, 93 M 466, 19 P2d 227 (1933).

Question of Sufficiency of Levy: The fact that Initiative Measure No. 19 is indefinite as to the time during which it shall be operative and the tax levy provided for is limited, held not to render it violative of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., the question of whether the tax provided for proved to be sufficient to pay the principal and interest on the bonds being one addressed to legislative action, in the absence of an affirmative showing that it is not sufficient. State ex rel. Bonner v. Dixon, 59 M 58, 195 P 841 (1921), overruled on other grounds in Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975).

State Elevator Bonds: A statute which in substance provides for the levy of a tax on agricultural lands for the purpose of paying interest and principal on state terminal elevator bonds only in the event that the receipts from the operation of the elevator are insufficient to provide the proper amount is not invalid for failure to provide for the extinguishment of the debt within a specified time when it can be ascertained therefrom by rules of statutory construction that the Legislature intended to impose a tax for the payment of the bonds and that the surplus accumulated from the operation of the elevator might be used to discharge the debt at such time as the Legislature may make provision therefor. State ex rel. Lyman v. Stewart, 58 M 1, 190 P 129 (1920), overruled on other grounds in Stoner v. Timmons, 59 M 158, 196 P 520 (1921), and Pritchard v. Hannah, 59 M 298, 196 P 517 (1921).

AD VALOREM TAXES

"Debt or Liability" — Limitation to Ad Valorem Taxes:

Since the U.S. Supreme Court held invalid limiting to taxpayers the right to vote on questions of debt or liability, there is no longer any reason to limit the words "debt or liability" as used in Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., to debts to be retired out of ad valorem taxes. State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 868 (1971), distinguishing Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958).

Article IX, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., amended the words "debt or liability" as they appeared in Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., and effectively confined them to debts or liabilities which must be retired out of ad valorem taxes. Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958), distinguished in State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 868 (1971).

TREASURY NOTES

"Debt" — Notes to Pay Outstanding Warrants: By the issuance of treasury notes to secure funds to pay outstanding registered warrants, no new debt is created within the meaning of the Constitution, the effect of their authorization being merely to change the evidence of indebtedness from warrants to treasury notes. State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925).

"Debt or Liability" — Tax Anticipation Notes: The issuance and sale of treasury notes in anticipation of the payment of taxes levied to procure funds with which to pay outstanding valid claims against and current expenses of the state did not constitute the incurring of a "debt or liability". State ex rel. Rankin v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 59 M 557, 197 P 988 (1921).

ELECTION REQUIREMENTS

Persons Entitled to Vote: Article XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring that laws creating an indebtedness be submitted to the people, is qualified by Art. IX, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., which provides that in questions concerning the creation of a levy, debt, or liability the voter "must also be a taxpayer whose name appears on the last preceding completed assessment roll". Thomas v. Bd. of Examiners, 122 M 564, 207 P2d 553 (1949).

"General Election" Defined: The concluding provision of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the incurring of state indebtedness in excess of $100,000, unless the law authorizing it shall have been submitted to the people at a "general election" and approved by them, held not necessarily to mean the general biennial election but does mean a statewide election at which all the people entitled to vote may vote on a question affecting them as a whole. Pioneer Motors, Inc. v. St. Highway Comm'n, 118 M 333, 165 P2d 796 (1946); Arps v. St. Highway Comm'n, 90 M 152, 300 P 549 (1931), overruled on other grounds in Burgan & Walker, Inc. v. St. Highway Comm'n, 114 M 459, 137 P2d 663 (1943); State ex rel. Diederichs v. St. Highway Comm'n, 89 M 205, 296 P 1033 (1931).

Law Creating Debt: Held, that Ch. 168, L. 1939 (omitted), construed in connection with Ch. 55, L. 1941 (omitted), directing the state Board of Examiners to issue and sell the bonds for the erection of necessary buildings at the state hospital for the insane, does not run counter to the provisions of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Article XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., does not require that a law creating a state debt in excess of $100,000 shall be submitted to the people at a general election for their approval or rejection but only a law authorizing the debt. Nordquist v. Ford, 112 M 278, 114 P2d 1071 (1941).

Express Statutory Exception: Since Ch. 22, Ex. L. 1933-34 (omitted), expressly provides that any bonds issued under its authority "shall not constitute or be a debt, liability or obligation of the state", contention that it nevertheless does create a debt in excess of $100,000 and therefore violates Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., in that the question of creating the debt was not first submitted to the people at a general election, may not be sustained. State ex rel. Hawkins v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 97 M 441, 35 P2d 116 (1934). See also Rutherford v. Great Falls, 107 M 512, 86 P2d 656 (1939).

Insufficient Information to Electorate: Chapter 126, L. 1929 (omitted), in providing that there shall be levied annually an ad valorem tax sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds for the first 10 years and sufficient thereafter to pay interest and provide for a sinking fund, held void for the further reason that it fails to fix a specific tax levy required for the purposes mentioned, the people in voting upon the question thus not having been advised to what extent the tax levy for state purposes, otherwise fixed and definite, would be increased, and in leaving it to future legislative assemblies to make provision for a tax levy as occasion might arise. Herrin v. Erickson, 90 M 259, 2 P2d 296 (1931), overruled on other grounds in Nordquist v. Ford, 112 M 278, 114 P2d 1071 (1941).

State Highway Treasury Anticipation Debenture Act: Under this case, held that Ch. 95, L. 1931 (omitted), the State Highway Treasury Anticipation Debenture Act of 1931, creating indebtedness in excess of the constitutional limitation, approved by the people on May 5, 1931, is not invalid as having been submitted for approval or rejection at other than a general election within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Arps v. St. Highway Comm'n, 90 M 152, 300 P 549 (1931), overruled on other grounds in Burgan & Walker, Inc. v. St. Highway Comm'n, 114 M 459, 137 P2d 663 (1943).

Highway Debentures: Held, that Ch. 1, L. 1931 (omitted), authorizing the sale of state highway debentures in the sum of $6,000,000 maturing serially at a given rate during a period of 6 years and made payable out of the state highway fund, in which all money received from the collection of gasoline license taxes shall be deposited, the act providing that such excise tax shall not be reduced but shall remain at the rate fixed therein until all of such debentures are paid, is unconstitutional as creating a liability (which includes a debt) within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the creation by the Legislative Assembly of a debt or liability in excess of $100,000 unless the law authorizing the same shall first have been submitted to and received the approval of the people at a general election. State ex rel. Diederichs v. St. Highway Comm'n, 89 M 205, 296 P 1033 (1931).

MISCELLANEOUS

Debt Payable Out of Surplus: Held, that section 78-403, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), appropriating $30,000 for architect's fee for preparation of plans and specifications for erection of addition to state Capitol building, the appropriation to be paid out of the unexpended surplus of nearly $5 million in the general fund of the state, is not invalid under Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Graham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 116 M 584, 155 P2d 956 (1945).

Presumption of Adequacy of Funds: When it appears that the funds provided by the Legislature will be sufficient, it is presumed that the provision for payment is and will be sufficient to meet the requirements of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. Willett v. Bd. of Examiners, 112 M 317, 115 P2d 287 (1941).

Debenture Act: Initiative Measure No. 41, the 1938 Debenture Act (omitted), does not offend against Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., as not providing for a sufficient tax to pay the interest on and extinguish the principal of the debt created within the time limited by the law for payment thereof, in view of the admissions in the pleadings as to the net revenue derived from a previous like act. The contract is irrevocable and the act irrepealable. Martin v. St. Highway Comm'n, 107 M 603, 88 P2d 41 (1939). See also Pioneer Motors, Inc. v. St. Highway Comm'n, 118 M 333, 165 P2d 796 (1946).

Inapplicable to Indebtedness of School Districts: Article XIII, sec. 2, and Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., having to do, respectively, with state indebtedness and legislative power in making appropriations and authorizing expenditures, have no application to cities or school districts, which are governed in that behalf by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. Decisions defining state indebtedness or holding that warrants issued pursuant to lawful appropriations do not create such indebtedness have no application in determining the status of a school district issued after it has reached its constitutional limit of indebtedness. Farbo v. School District, 95 M 531, 28 P2d 455 (1933).

Specific Obligation Contemplated: The terms of Art. XIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., implied and contemplated a specific obligation, created by the Legislature itself, of such a character that computation will disclose in advance what tax levy is requisite to pay the interest on and to extinguish the debt at its maturity. State ex rel. Campbell v. Stewart, 54 M 504, 171 P 755 (1918).

Attorney General's Opinions

Unfunded Liability in Industrial Insurance Expendable Trust Fund (Now Private Purpose Trust Fund) Not State Debt: To the extent an unfunded liability may exist in the industrial insurance expendable trust fund (now private purpose trust fund), it has arisen not by conscious act of the Legislature but from a combination of circumstances that resulted in a mismatch between liability incurred and trust fund deposits. Further, no claim was made that the trust fund's corpus would be inadequate to satisfy accrued benefit payment obligations. For these reasons, the unfunded liability was not considered a "state debt" within the meaning of Art. VIII, sec. 8, Mont. Const. 42 A.G. Op. 46 (1987).

Lease-Purchase Agreement as Debt: The Legislature authorized the Department of Administration to incur future lease and/or purchase payments not to exceed $1.5 million for a building for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). The Attorney General relied on State ex rel. Simmons v. Missoula, 144 M 210, 395 P2d 249 (1964), to determine that a lease-purchase agreement constitutes a "debt" within the meaning of this section. Because the bill authorizing the agreement did not pass both houses of the Legislature by a two-thirds majority, there was no legal method for carrying out the agreement. 35 A.G. Op. 41 (1973).

Case Notes

Suspension of Income Tax Increase — No Violation of Balanced Budget Provisions: Natelson collected enough petition signatures on an income tax increase passed by the Legislature to suspend the increase and refer it to the people for a vote. Nicholson filed suit, claiming that the suspension unbalanced the state budget and that the meaning of this article in this case was that general revenue bills could not be suspended and referred. The Supreme Court held that it was not the action of the Legislature that put the budget out of balance but the action of the people in referring the tax and that this article did not place any restrictions on the power of the people to suspend and refer a tax. Nicholson v. Cooney, 265 M 406, 877 P2d 486, 51 St. Rep. 579 (1994).

Bonded Debt — Not Invalid as Continuing Appropriation: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The bonds would be financed by coal severance taxes to provide proceeds for development of state water resources. Plaintiff contended that this was an invalid "continuing appropriation". Plaintiff contended that the 48th Legislature by enacting the program could not constitutionally bind future Legislatures to "appropriate" the coal tax money necessary to service the bonds; that the principal of the coal severance tax trust funds had been invaded for years; and that each bond issue requires a separate appropriation of coal severance tax revenues by a three-fourths vote of each house of the Legislature. The Supreme Court harmonized the various constitutional provisions involved. The court held that the Legislature can authorize long-term borrowing by issuing and selling bonds and can provide for the servicing for such indebtedness by repayment or refunding. The court found nothing making the coal severance tax trust fund immune from use as a source of funding for long-term state bonds. When the Legislature validly acts to establish a debt, that indebtedness becomes a state obligation extending over the life of the indebtedness, and every succeeding legislative assembly has an unavoidable duty to provide for it in the manner required by the authorizing law. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Separation of Powers — Budget a Legislative Function: Notwithstanding Art. VI, sec. 9, Mont. Const., the budget is a legislative budget, not an executive budget. Article V, sec. 1 and 11, and Art. VIII, sec. 9, 12, and 14, Mont. Const., vest not only the power to approve appropriation bills and a budget in the legislative branch but to create an interim committee to gather information from other branches of government necessary to form a rational basis for its budget determinations. State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Fin. Comm., 168 M 470, 543 P2d 1317 (1975).

Korean War Honorariums: Statute amending initiative act providing for honorarium for World War II veterans so as to make Korean veterans eligible to receive honorariums did not violate Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958), overruled on other grounds in State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 868 (1971).

Special or Trust Funds: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application to special or trust funds which have never been placed in the general funds of the state. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948), overruled on other grounds in Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975).

Not Applicable to Bond and Debenture Measures: The Highway Treasury Anticipation Debenture Act of 1945 (omitted) was not unconstitutional as violative of Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., since the provision had no application to bond and debenture measures. Pioneer Motors, Inc. v. Highway Comm'n, 118 M 333, 165 P2d 796 (1946).

Appropriation to Be Paid Out of Surplus: Section appropriating architect's fee for preparation of plans and specifications for erection of addition to Capitol, the appropriation to be paid out of the unexpended surplus of the general fund, was not invalid under Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. Graham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 116 M 584, 155 P2d 956 (1945).

Meaning: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., meant that no appropriation may be made or any expenditure authorized by the Legislature whereby the expenditures of the state during any fiscal year exceed the total of funds available and applicable to such appropriation or expenditure. Available funds include not only funds in the treasury not otherwise appropriated but money to be derived from taxes and other sources provided for by the Legislature for the year. Graham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 116 M 584, 155 P2d 956 (1945).

Not Applicable to Initiative Levying Tax to Cover Appropriation: Initiative Measure did not violate Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. The term "appropriation" as used did not apply to an act providing for the issuance of bonds or debentures wherein the act creating the debt also levies a tax to pay it. Martin v. Highway Comm'n, 107 M 603, 88 P2d 41 (1939). See Pioneer Motors, Inc. v. Highway Comm'n, 118 M 333, 165 P2d 796 (1946).

Special Funds — Two-Year Limitation: The provision of Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., that appropriations shall not be made for a longer term than 2 years had no application to special funds. State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935).

Special Funds: Since law expressly provided for a special fund for carrying out its provisions, it was not invalid as attempting to appropriate money without regard to this section. State ex rel. Hawkins v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 97 M 441, 35 P2d 116 (1934).

Building Construction: Neither Ch. 10, L. 1933 (not codified), nor the plan adopted by the State Board of Education for financing construction violated Art. XII, sec. 12, or Art. XIII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Blume v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 371, 34 P2d 515 (1934); State ex rel. Veeder v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 121, 33 P2d 516 (1934).

Inapplicable to Indebtedness of Cities or School Districts: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application to cities or school districts. Therefore, decisions defining state indebtedness or holding that warrants issued pursuant to lawful appropriations do not create such indebtedness have no application in determining the status of a school district issued after it has reached its constitutional limit of indebtedness. Farbo v. School District, 95 M 531, 28 P2d 455 (1933).

State Contracts Extending Beyond Appropriation Limit: In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, the Legislature may authorize a contract for a longer term than 2 years, although appropriations of public money in payment may not be made for a longer period. A contract for fire insurance for 3 years did not invalidate an appropriation in payment of premiums made for 2 years only. Miller Ins. Agency v. Porter, 93 M 567, 20 P2d 643 (1933).

Bonds to Fund Outstanding Warrants: Laws authorizing the issuance of bonds for the purpose of funding an accumulation of outstanding general warrants were not invalid on the alleged ground that the appropriations on which the warrants were based had been made in violation of Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Tipton v. Erickson, 93 M 466, 19 P2d 227 (1933).

Inapplicable to Past Appropriations: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., had to do only with the relation of future expenditures to income and not with past appropriations made within the reasonably estimated income and in good faith, but which by reason of unforeseen contingencies resulted in registration of warrants. State ex rel. Tipton v. Erickson, 93 M 466, 19 P2d 227 (1933).

Authorization of Future Appropriations: Section increasing the tax levy for state purposes by 1.5 mills for the period of 10 years and directing successive Legislatures for that period how the proceeds thereof shall be appropriated and authorizing the Assembly to make the appropriations for each of the 10 years was not unconstitutional. State ex rel. Jones v. Erickson, 75 M 429, 244 P 287 (1926).

University Appropriation Valid: Under the showing made on application for Writ of Injunction against the Board of Examiners, the appropriations made by the Legislature for the four teaching units comprising the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) do not exceed the amount received from the 1.5 mill levy authorized for their maintenance and therefore do not transgress Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Jones v. Erickson, 75 M 429, 244 P 287 (1926).

Appropriations in Excess of Income Prohibited: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., must be interpreted to refer not only to the money raised by direct taxation but also to anticipated income from all other sources. State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925).

War Appropriations — Exception: The War Defense Act was to assist in the defense of the United States. The appropriation made therein falls within the exception found in Art. XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., under which the Legislature may properly make an appropriation without a fund behind it and without provision having been first made for levying a tax to furnish the fund. St. v. Kahn, 56 M 108, 182 P 107 (1919); State ex rel. Campbell v. Stewart, 54 M 504, 171 P 755 (1918).

Time Limit on Appropriations: Article XII, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., operated as an automatic limit so that an unlimited appropriation as to time would expire at the end of 2 years and was not void ab initio. Hill v. Rae, 52 M 378, 158 P 826 (1916).

Attorney General's Opinions

Expenditure Limits Not Extended to Future Biennial Budget Cycles: A County Commissioner questioned whether 17-8-106 (enacted 1981) limited the power of subsequent Legislatures to appropriate funds by establishing a cap on expenditures in the 1981 budget biennium and for future biennial budget cycles. The Attorney General noted that, consistent with constitutional design, the Legislature lacks the power to pass a law that purports to establish binding legislative spending policy for future Legislatures. Each Legislature is vested with full legislative power, and there is no cap on state spending in the Montana Constitution. Thus, the 1981 enactment of 17-8-106 placed no enforceable limits on the spending power of subsequent Legislatures. 51 A.G. Op. 4 (2005).

No Encumbrance of Unexpended Microbusiness Development Funds After End of Fiscal Year: The Department of Commerce entered contracts with several microbusiness development corporations in June 1997, contingent upon matching funds being provided by September 30, 1997. However, when the matching funds were not received by that date, the Department amended the contracts to extend the time for providing matching funds to September 30, 1999. The Legislative Auditor conceded that Department rules allowed a valid encumbrance through September 30, 1997 (see ARM 8.99.505(3)), but maintained that after that time, the funds were no longer validly encumbered and should have reverted to the coal tax trust fund from which they were appropriated. The Attorney General agreed. In light of the balanced budget requirement in this section, 17-7-304 contemplates that an appropriation for a specific purpose will revert to the fund or account from which it was appropriated after the expiration of the time for which it was appropriated, and appropriations for an unspecified period of time must revert at the end of the biennium. In this case, the appropriation was subject to reversion on June 30, 1997. The Department had administrative authority to create a valid encumbrance until September 30, 1997, but once that contingency expired, the Department had no authority to contract further in order to encumber the funds. There is no legal provision allowing encumbrance of funds after the end of a fiscal year. Because the Department's commitments were made after fiscal yearend, they were not valid obligations pursuant to 17-7-302; thus any unexpended balance from the appropriation should have reverted to the coal tax trust fund as of September 30, 1997. 48 A.G. Op. 26 (2000). See also 40 A.G. Op. 4 (1983).

Section 10. Local government debt.

County Allowed Choice Whether to Issue Bonds Secured by Revolving Fund — County Not Relieved of Obligation to Make Loans to Deficient Rural Special Improvement Districts: The plain meaning of statutes regarding revolving funds, as well as the legislative history, supports the legislative intent to allow counties to choose whether to finance a rural special improvement district by issuing bonds secured by the revolving fund. Nothing in the statutes voids the commitment to loan from the revolving fund if the district becomes deficient. In this case, County Commissioners agreed to a revolving fund obligation and issued bonds secured by the revolving fund. The District Court reasoned that this was a violation of the constitutional prohibition against indebtedness beyond a certain percent, holding that the county was thus relieved of its obligation to make such loans. However, special improvement bond obligations are limited to the district funds and, if necessary, receive loans from the revolving fund. If both funds are insufficient to meet bond payments, there is no other source to pay the bonds. Under 7-12-2182, revolving fund levies are limited to an amount that would increase the balance in the fund to no more than 5% of the principal amount of the outstanding bonds. The District Court erred in its decision that the county was not obligated to make loans to the special improvement districts. Having exercised the discretion to institute a revolving fund and freely enter into an agreement with the bondholders and the underwriters, under both the terms of the agreement and applicable statutes, a county is obliged to carry out that contractual obligation. Loans from the revolving fund and subsequent tax levies are within the constitutional mandates of section 1 of this article, which requires that state funds be used for public purposes. Further, a county's obligation to make such loans and levy taxes to fund the revolving fund is mandatory, rather than discretionary, and is not an unconstitutional pledge of credit. Carbon County v. Dain Bosworth, Inc., 265 M 75, 874 P2d 718, 51 St. Rep. 436 (1994), distinguishing Stanley v. Jeffries, 86 M 114, 284 P 134 (1929), and Hansen v. Havre, 112 M 207, 114 P2d 1053 (1941).

WHAT CONSTITUTES INDEBTEDNESS

"Indebtedness or Liability": County Commissioners who overlevied a tax on the county taxpayers in order to provide a reserve fund greater than $21,000 to finance capital improvements and remodeling of existing airport violated this section; county could not circumvent this section by arguing that the funds were already on hand and that hence they had not created an "indebtedness or liability" on the county. Burlington N., Inc. v. Flathead County, 162 M 371, 512 P2d 710 (1973), distinguished in Yovetich v. McClintock, 165 M 80, 526 P2d 999 (1974).

Industrial Development Revenue Bonds: Industrial development project laws (Title 90, ch. 5, part 1) do not violate Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., since they provide for revenue bonds and do not create debt or liability within the meaning of that section. Fickes v. Missoula County, 155 M 258, 470 P2d 287 (1970).

Lease Payments: Under resolution providing that city would convey title to properties to party who would cause to be built on one property a city-approved building which the city would rent for an annual rental for a period of 3 years with option in the city to purchase property together with the building thereon, lease payments were forms of indebtedness within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Simmons v. Missoula, 144 M 210, 395 P2d 249 (1964).

Special Improvement District — Revolving Fund: Funds obtained from a special improvement district revolving fund created under Title 7, ch. 12, part 42, to make good any deficiency in the bond and interest accounts of any one of several special improvement districts created to take care of a city's share of the cost of constructing a diversion dam for protection of city property from overflow of a creek were mere loans to the improvement district fund, for which the revolving fund, under 7-12-4224, has a lien as security. Therefore, the contemplated bonds would not amount to the incurring of a city debt in excess of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. Hansen v. Havre, 112 M 207, 114 P2d 1053 (1941).

Housing Bonds: The bonds authorized to be issued by a housing authority, by the very terms of 7-15-4503, are not to be considered an indebtedness falling within the limitations of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. Rutherford v. Great Falls, 107 M 512, 86 P2d 656 (1939).

County Indebtedness to Refer to Fixed Not Contingent Liability: The contingency that at some time in the future counties which have patients at the state tuberculosis sanitarium may be required to incur an indebtedness in excess of $10,000 to pay for their care as their number increases is not sufficient to condemn Ch. 22, Ex. L. 1933-34 (omitted), under Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., which prohibits the incurring of such a debt without submitting the proposition to the electors thereof, that section apparently contemplating a fixed and not a contingent liability or indebtedness. State ex rel. Hawkins v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 97 M 441, 35 P2d 116 (1934).

Uncollected Delinquent Taxes — Not Deductible: "Indebtedness" of a school district, within the constitutional provision limiting it, means what it owes, irrespective of demands it may have against others. In determining whether a district has reached its limit, uncollected delinquent taxes are not deductible from its gross indebtedness. Farbo v. School District, 95 M 531, 28 P2d 455 (1933).

Cash on Hand — Approved Purpose: The provision of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., that no county shall incur any indebtedness or liability for a single purpose in an amount exceeding $10,000 without the approval of a majority of the electors thereof applies to the creation of an obligation to be met and paid in the future by the taxpayers and has no application to the "expenditure", in excess of that amount, of cash on hand usable only for a designated purpose already approved by the electors. State ex rel. Diederichs v. Bd. of Trustees, 91 M 300, 7 P2d 543 (1932).

Lease With Purchase Option: The Board of Commissioners of a county having no courthouse entered into a contract of lease with the owner of a building, the term of the lease being 4 years at a rental of $2,400 per annum, with the privilege in the county of renewal for a like period. The lease contained an option giving the county the right to purchase during the existence of the contract at the price of $31,000. Held, in an action to enjoin the carrying out of the contract, that the lease portion thereof calling for an expenditure of only $9,600 during a period of 4 years did not come within the constitutional prohibition of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. The option portion, separate and apart from that relating to the lease, did not bind the county and was presumably entered into with the understanding that before the option could be exercised the question would have to be submitted to a vote of the electors and that therefore the court erred in granting the writ. Bennett v. Petroleum County, 87 M 436, 288 P 1018 (1930).

"Incur Indebtedness or Liability": The term "incur indebtedness or liability", as used in Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is not synonymous with the term "borrow money" used in section 2933, R.C.M. 1907 (7-7-2402). Edwards v. Lewis & Clark County, 53 M 359, 165 P 297 (1917).

New Indebtedness: Article XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., had to do with the creation of new indebtedness or liability. Edwards v. Lewis & Clark County, 53 M 359, 165 P 297 (1917).

Mileage and Per Diem: The mileage and per diem of County Commissioners, charged to their county on account of trips made to the site of a bridge, and expenses incurred for services of the County Surveyor in surveying and locating the site are not proper items to be taken into consideration in arriving at the amount of indebtedness which could be lawfully incurred by the county on account of the construction of the bridge, without first obtaining the approval of a majority of the electors of the county. Jenkins v. Newman, 39 M 77, 101 P 625 (1909).

"Indebtedness" — What Owed: The word "indebtedness", as used in Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., means what a city owes, irrespective of the demands which it may hold against others. The amount of cash on hand may be deducted from the "indebtedness", but claims against a county for road taxes collected for the city and the amount due from landowners for sidewalks cannot be so deducted. Jordan v. Andrus, 27 M 22, 69 P 118 (1902).

CHANGE OF FORM OF INDEBTEDNESS

Refunding Bonds: The issuance of refunding bonds merely changes the form of the evidence of preexisting indebtedness and does not involve the creation of any new indebtedness within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. The inhibition therein contained is directed to the Legislature. Edwards v. Lewis & Clark County, 53 M 359, 165 P 297 (1917); Palmer v. Helena, 19 M 61, 47 P 209 (1896); Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 M 218, 29 P 821 (1892).

Claim of Assignment — Unauthorized Payment: A city which has exceeded its debt limit prescribed by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., cannot incur an indebtedness not payable from a specially authorized tax but payable from funds previously appropriated. An agreement was entered that the claimants should accept warrants in payment of their claims, and that if the warrant should not be paid, the city should not be liable therefor. The payment of such claims on the theory that the appropriation by ordinance was an assignment of the funds so appropriated for the payment of the claims was unauthorized. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 27 M 205, 70 P 513 (1902). See Palmer v. Helena, 40 M 498, 107 P 512 (1910).

Change of Form of Indebtedness Not Within Inhibition of This Provision: The funding by a city of an existing indebtedness by the issuance of bonds does not create a new or additional indebtedness but merely changes the form of the liability. Article XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., forbidding the creation by a city of an indebtedness greater than 3% of the assessed value of property within its limits unless the creation thereof is necessary and authorized by a vote of the taxpayers for the purpose of constructing a sewer or water system, prohibits the creation of an indebtedness beyond the 3% limit for such purposes by a city which had its sewerage system at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Palmer v. Helena, 19 M 61, 47 P 209 (1896). See Butler v. Andrus, 35 M 575, 90 P 785 (1907); Edwards v. Lewis & Clark County, 53 M 359, 165 P 297 (1917).

Redemption of Warrants: The issuance by a county of coupon bonds to the extent of $150,000 for the purpose of redeeming outstanding county warrants to that amount is merely a change in the form of a subsisting liability and not the creation of a new indebtedness or liability and is therefore not within the inhibition of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., and laws of the state which provide, in effect, that counties shall not incur an indebtedness or liability for any single purpose in an amount exceeding $10,000 without the approval of a majority of the electors of the county. Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 M 218, 29 P 821 (1892). See also Hoffman v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 18 M 224, 44 P 973 (1896); Palmer v. Helena, 19 M 61, 47 P 209 (1896); E.H. Rollins & Sons v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 80 F 692, 26 CCA 91 (1897); Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 86 F 272, 30 CCA 38 (1898); State ex rel. Diederichs v. Bd. of Trustees, 91 M 300, 7 P2d 543 (1932).

JOINT OBLIGATIONS

Combined Bond Issue: Bonds issued pursuant to a plan authorizing high school district and common school district included therein to build grade school and high school in one compact unit sharing common facilities was not an attempt to circumvent debt limits imposed on the districts by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. Long v. School District, 149 M 220, 425 P2d 822 (1967).

Overlapping School Districts: A high school district was created which overlapped the common school districts. The high school district could incur indebtedness so long as such indebtedness, when apportioned among the common school districts in proportion to the assessed valuation of the property in each, added to the existing indebtedness of the common school districts respectively, did not bring the debt of any of the latter in excess of the limit prescribed by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. Wright v. Browning High School District, 125 M 495, 240 P2d 862 (1952).

Taxpayer Not to Question Constitutionality — When: A taxpayer contended that Ch. 47, Ex. L. 1933 (sections 75-4601 through 75-4606, R.C.M. 1947, now repealed), authorizing creation of high school districts, was in conflict with Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., limiting the indebtedness of school districts. This contention was based on the possibility of including in the district created a common school district already indebted to such an extent that its proportion of a proposed bond issue under the act, when added to the existing indebtedness, would exceed the constitutional limit. Such a contention may only be made by a taxpayer in a district or by a district in such situation. Pierson v. Hendricksen, 98 M 244, 38 P2d 991 (1934).

Joint Contract of Counties: The Commissioners of two counties entered into a contract for the construction of a bridge over a river separating them, the contract price of which was $19,998, and each county became obligated in the sum of $9,999. Without proper approaches, the cost of which would approximate $300, the bridge would be useless, although the contract did not make any provision for them. It was held that, in view of a section of the Code then in force declaring that the word "bridge" included the approaches thereto, the single purpose sought to be accomplished by the Commissioners was the building of a bridge with approaches thereto and that, since that purpose could not be consummated without exceeding the constitutional limitation, the contract was void. Jenkins v. Newman, 39 M 77, 101 P 625 (1909).

LIMITATION BY LEGISLATURE

Legislature — May Fix Lower Limit: Under Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., a county was prohibited from becoming indebted "in any manner or for any purpose" in excess of 5% of the full cash value of all its taxable property. Under section 4614, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), the statutory limitation in that respect was that a county's bonded indebtedness shall not exceed 5% of the value fixed by the classification act (sections 84-301 and 84-302, R.C.M. 1947, now repealed) for assessment purposes, thus greatly reducing the limit of indebtedness which a county may lawfully incur. The provision of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is not a grant of power to counties to incur indebtedness but merely fixes the maximum limit of indebtedness permissible. Therefore, the Legislature, not being prohibited by the Constitution from doing so, may, as it did by enacting Ch. 21, L. 1923 (since repealed), fix a lower limit than that prescribed. State ex rel. Henderson v. Dawson County, 87 M 122, 286 P 125 (1930); Heckman v. Custer County, 70 M 84, 223 P 916 (1924).

Statutes Changing Value Upon Which Limit Is Based: Chapter 21, L. 1923, amendatory of section 4614, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), substituting the taxable value (the percentage of the assessed value upon which taxes are made computable by sections 84-301 and 84-302, R.C.M. 1947, now repealed) for the assessed value (the value fixed upon taxable property by the County Assessor and County and State Boards of Equalization, now County and State Tax Appeal Boards) of property as the basis for determining the limit of county bonded indebtedness, thus in effect fixing a lower limit of indebtedness than that prescribed by Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is a valid exercise of legislative authority. Heckman v. Custer County, 70 M 84, 223 P 916 (1924).

"Last Assessment": The last assessment roll, within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., from which the limit of indebtedness of a county shall be computed, is the last complete roll before the debt is contracted and not the last assessment roll in existence at the time the indebtedness was authorized at the polls. State ex rel. Galles v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 56 M 387, 185 P 456 (1919).

Limitation Interpreted: The constitutional limitation contained in Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., is clear and unambiguous and means just what it says, namely, that no indebtedness may be contracted in any manner or amount, for any purpose, in excess of the prescribed limit. Lepley v. Fort Benton, 51 M 551, 154 P 710 (1916); Butler v. Andrus, 35 M 575, 90 P 785 (1907); State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 M 521, 63 P 99 (1900).

Void to Extent of Repugnancy: The act of March 5, 1891, authorizing certain incorporated cities to incur indebtedness for specific purposes by the issuance of bonds to an extent not exceeding 4% of their assessed valuation instead of 3% as limited by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., was not void as being wholly in conflict with said section but is void only to the extent of such repugnancy. Therefore bonds issued by a city under such act are valid where the amount of indebtedness so incurred is less than 3% of the assessed valuation of such city. Dunn v. Great Falls, 13 M 58, 31 P 1017 (1893).

ELECTION REQUIREMENTS

Approval by Resolution — Invalid: City-County Airport Commission, which made two $100,000 loans from the State Aeronautics Commission (now Board of Aeronautics) without approval of either loan by the electorate and which was obligated to repay a total sum of $238,500 over 10 years, had incurred a debt upon which an amount over $10,000 was due each year in violation of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const.; resolution by Airport Commission that approved the loan and which obligated county to repay only $10,000 did not bring the debt within the constitutional limitation since the resolutions approving the loans made it clear that the county intended the loans to be a debt on the county treasury and that the county's budget was an integral part of the repayment schedule. Burlington N., Inc. v. Richland County, 162 M 364, 512 P2d 707 (1973), distinguished in Yovetich v. McClintock, 165 M 80, 526 P2d 999 (1974).

Power to Ratify Bond Election: Legislature in its representative capacity is the sovereign power of a state, and as the power to prescribe the form of ballot in the first instance was in the Legislature, it had the power to ratify an election where the form of ballot used was other than that prescribed. Chapter 99, L. 1935 (omitted), remedied irregularities occurring in procedure taken by commissioners under authority of Ch. 24, Ex. L. 1933-34. Church v. Lincoln County, 100 M 238, 46 P2d 681 (1935).

Proposition to Exceed Debt Limitation — Contents: A city intended to incur indebtedness in excess of the 3% constitutional limit by the issuance of bonds for water plant purposes. The proposition submitted to the voters for their approval must, in addition to setting forth the purpose of the bond issue and the amount to be issued, incorporate the question whether such constitutional limit is to be extended. Edmunds v. Glasgow, 89 M 596, 300 P 203 (1931).

Seed-Grain Law: The seed-grain law, Ch. 13, L. 1915 (since repealed), designed to furnish aid to persons engaged in agriculture who, because they are so reduced in circumstances by natural or other conditions beyond their control, have no means wherewith to purchase seed, insofar as it seeks to create an indebtedness by a county bond issue in excess of $10,000 upon a mere petition and no provision for an election having been made, is in conflict with Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Cryderman v. Wienrich, 54 M 390, 170 P 942 (1918).

Erection of High School: A statute authorizing the erection of a county high school immediately after a favorable vote thereon at a cost in excess of the constitutional limitation without requiring the question of the indebtedness to be submitted to the electors is invalid on the ground that the Legislature cannot authorize an expenditure in excess of such limitation. Panchot v. Leet, 50 M 314, 146 P 927 (1915).

"Majority of Electors Thereof Voting at an Election" — Meaning: The evident meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is that the approval must be the result of an expression of a majority of those voting. The expression "majority of the electors thereof voting at an election" clearly means a majority of those who vote and not a majority of all the electors of the county or of those who vote upon any other issue at the same or some other time. This conclusion is reached because the language employed indicates that the Constitutional Convention had adopted the theory that the control of public affairs must be regarded as belonging to those electors who take sufficient interest in them to give expression to their views at the ballot box. Morse v. Granite County, 44 M 78, 119 P 286 (1911); Tinkel v. Griffin, 26 M 426, 68 P 859 (1902).

Authority to Proceed Under Special Election: The authority conferred upon a City Council by a special election called for that purpose, to incur additional indebtedness for water and sewer purposes, does not lapse upon the completion of the assessment roll for the year in which the election is held. The requirement of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., that the question whether the debt shall be incurred must be submitted to the taxpayers "to be affected thereby", is satisfied if the Council, after authority to act has been voted, proceeds with reasonable diligence to issue and sell the bonds. Carlson v. Helena, 39 M 82, 102 P 39 (1909).

WATER SUPPLY

Issuance of Warrants Without Authorization: A city extended the limit of its indebtedness to acquire a water supply system beyond the 3% constitutional limit provided in Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., and section 11-966, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), to the extent of $25,000. It issued registered warrants for $75,000 without authorization by its voters, then funded the indebtedness by selling bonds which recited that all proper steps had been taken to make them legal obligations of the city. The city was estopped from questioning their validity on constitutional grounds and refusing further payment thereon. Clerihew v. Baker, 109 M 317, 96 P2d 269 (1939).

Bonds Increasing Net Revenue: Article XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., declaring that where a city's indebtedness is increased beyond the 3% limit for water supply purposes the revenues derived therefrom must be used to pay the debt, is not violated by the city's entering into a contract with the Water Conservation Board (now Water Resources Division) for a new supply whereby the net revenue will be increased rather than diminished. The holder of bonds sold for funds to acquire the old plant has no cause for complaint. Farmers St. Bank of Conrad v. Conrad, 100 M 415, 47 P2d 853 (1935).

Constitutional Exception Matter of Defense: To render a complaint in an action to enjoin a city from allowing claims against it and ordering payment by warrant on the ground that it had exceeded its constitutional limit of indebtedness sufficient, plaintiff is not required to allege that the debt limit has not been extended for water or sewer purposes, the exception in that behalf provided for in Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., being a matter to be asserted in defense. Commonwealth Pub. Serv. Co. v. Deer Lodge, 96 M 15, 28 P2d 472 (1934).

Taxpayer Not a Water User — Not Required to Contribute: Where a city water system bond issue is beyond the 3% limit, the revenues from the city-owned water plant are irrevocably set aside and dedicated to the discharge of the interest and principal. A taxpayer who is not a water user may not be called upon to contribute unless the water plant revenues are insufficient, when a property tax may be levied to supply such deficiency. Edwards v. Helena, 58 M 292, 191 P 387 (1920).

"To Procure a Water Supply": Where a city had a water supply sufficient in quantity but unsuitable as to quality, issued bonds with the approval of the electors, and sold the same to procure funds to install a filtration plant, the constitutional 3% limit of indebtedness having already been reached, the contemplated expenditure was properly justifiable as one "to procure a water supply" within the meaning of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. McClintock v. Great Falls, 53 M 221, 163 P 99 (1917).

Use of Surplus Funds From Water System: After making ample provision for retiring bonds issued to procure a water system, a city had accumulated a surplus over and above the amount necessary to discharge the interest on the indebtedness as it became due. It could properly expend such surplus in part payment of a necessary filtration plant, without the sanction of the taxpayers' vote, transfer it to its general fund, place it in a special fund, or devote it to any legitimate municipal purpose without violating the provisions of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. McClintock v. Great Falls, 53 M 221, 163 P 99 (1917).

Limitation — Not Grant of Power: Since the Constitution limits rather than grants power, any of its provisions open to construction should be held to come within the general rule unless a contrary conclusion is forced by the circumstances of the particular case. The concluding sentence of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., must be understood as expressing constitutional restrictions imposed as a condition to the exercise of the privilege implied in the provision for extended indebtedness and not as a grant of power not enjoyed by a city acquiring a water system without incurring additional indebtedness. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 24 (1916).

Revenues From Water Systems — Devoted to Payment of Debt: It cannot be said that the injunction contained in Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., that the revenues derived from a water system shall be devoted to the payment of the extended indebtedness, secures to a city any special privilege. On the contrary, that language is not susceptible of any meaning other than that the city is prohibited from dissipating the funds derived from the operation of its water system or using them for general municipal purposes and is commanded to devote them to the single purpose indicated. It is strictly a limitation imposed in the interest of the city and the holders of its securities. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 24 (1916).

Water System — May Be Paid for by Taxation as Well as From Revenues From System: The provision of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., that the revenues derived from a water system purchased or installed by a city shall be devoted to the payment of the debt incurred in its acquisition, does not impliedly prohibit the municipality from resorting to taxation to pay the principal and interest on the bonds evidencing the indebtedness. Carlson v. Helena, 39 M 82, 102 P 39 (1909).

Extended Indebtedness: Under Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., a city could not resort to the 10% extended limit of indebtedness until its financial condition and the needs of the people had created the necessity for such action. A city had no authority to arbitrarily declare a second bond issue of $10,000 for water supply purposes, within the extended limit, so long as there was ample margin within the constitutional limit to cover such issue. Butler v. Andrus, 35 M 575, 90 P 785 (1907).

City Not Liable for Water Furnished: A city had already exceeded the constitutional limit of its indebtedness. A water company had furnished it water for municipal purposes under an ordinance providing for the obtaining of water for such purposes for a certain period and at a certain price, appropriating out of the city's yearly revenues sufficient money to pay for it, and ordering the City Council for such term to levy annual taxes to meet the appropriation. The company could not recover for water so furnished, inasmuch as the liability of the city would be general and not special. The contract entered into created and the amount due for water furnished thereunder constituted an indebtedness within the prohibition of Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 M 521, 63 P 99 (1900).

"Single Purpose": Held, that the words "single purpose" as used in Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that "no county shall incur any indebtedness or liability for any single purpose to an amount exceeding $10,000, without the approval of a majority of the electors thereof", mean a project or undertaking, the elements entering into which are so related that when combined they constitute an entity—something complete in itself but separate and apart from other objects. State ex rel. Nelson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 111 M 395, 109 P2d 1106 (1941); Nelson v. Jackson, 97 M 299, 33 P2d 822 (1934); Herrin v. Erickson, 90 M 259, 2 P2d 296 (1931), overruled on other grounds in Nordquist v. Ford, 112 M 278, 114 P2d 1071 (1941); Bennett v. Petroleum County, 87 M 436, 288 P 1018 (1930); State ex rel. Turner v. Patch, 64 M 565, 210 P 748 (1922).

Pay-As-You-Go Plan: Where a city has reached its limit of indebtedness as prescribed by Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., any further indebtedness incurred is void. It is without power to allow claims against it and draw warrants in payment thereof but under sections 7-6-4301 and 7-6-4302 may operate under the pay-as-you-go plan, i.e., by payment in cash. Commonwealth Pub. Serv. Co. v. Deer Lodge, 96 M 15, 28 P2d 472 (1934).

Anticipated Revenue — Must Be Considered: Under Art. XIII, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting cities and school districts from becoming indebted in any manner or for any purpose in the aggregate exceeding 3% of their taxable property, warrants issued for current expenses in anticipation of revenue to be collected under valid tax levies made must be considered in determining whether a district's limit of indebtedness has been reached. Farbo v. School District, 95 M 531, 28 P2d 455 (1933).

Implied Contract: Purchaser of special improvement district's bonds issued to contractor could not recover on theory of implied contract to pay for labor and material furnished, if the bonds were invalid. There was no privity between purchaser and municipality. Lumbermen's Trust Co. v. Ryegate, 61 F2d 14 (9th Cir. 1932). See also Lumbermen's Trust Co. v. Ryegate, 50 F2d 219 (9th Cir. 1931).

Recital in Bonds of Compliance With This Provision as an Estoppel: Recitals in municipal bonds that the constitutional and statutory limit of indebtedness has not been exceeded creates an estoppel as against innocent purchasers where there is nothing on the face of the bonds to indicate that the recitals are untrue. Edmunds v. Glasgow, 89 M 596, 300 P 203 (1931).

Indebtedness Limit — Not to Be Exceeded: Cities and towns may not go beyond the prescribed limit of indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose except as prescribed in the Constitution. They cannot transcend this limit except when necessary. Lepley v. Fort Benton, 51 M 551, 154 P 710 (1916).

When Additional Debt Permissible: Where a city's existing indebtedness incurred under the constitutional 3% limit has, by reason of payments thereon, fallen below that limit or because of the increase of the assessed valuation of its taxable property a sufficient margin within such limit is left for the purpose, it may, irrespective of any legally incurred indebtedness under the 10% limit authorized by the statute relating to the powers of municipal councils, contract an additional debt for general purposes. Arnold v. Miles City, 46 M 478, 128 P 915 (1912).

Restriction on County Commissioners: Article XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is a restriction upon the authority of the Board of County Commissioners and has no reference to the power of the people. The power of the Board is limited but that of the people themselves is unlimited, save as affected by other constitutional declarations. Reid v. Lincoln County, 46 M 31, 125 P 429 (1912), overruled on other grounds in State ex rel. McMaster v. District Court, 80 M 228, 260 P 134 (1927).

Surplus Revenues — Use Prohibited: A city which is indebted beyond the constitutional limitation may not use its surplus revenues, no matter from what source derived, to acquire an electric light plant to supply itself and its inhabitants with light where a company, operating both gas and electric light systems under a franchise from the city, has ample facilities to meet all requirements. Palmer v. Helena, 40 M 498, 107 P 512 (1910).

Construction: The argument of ab inconvenienti cannot avail in the interpretation of constitutional provisions relative to the limitations placed upon the power of a city to contract indebtedness. The rule of strict construction must be applied, and any doubt as to such power must be resolved against it. Butler v. Andrus, 35 M 575, 90 P 785 (1902); State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 M 521, 63 P 99 (1900); Palmer v. Helena, 19 M 61, 47 P 209 (1896).

County Debt Limitations Determined by the Legislature: The Montana Legislature may constitutionally authorize County Commissioners to issue, by resolution, revenue bonds in excess of $40,000 without an election. The Commissioners of a county having a population of less than 10,000 have authority to levy, without an election, 3 mills in addition to its present funding in the event the bonds issued under 7-34-2411, 7-34-2413 through 7-34-2416, and 7-34-2418 become delinquent or cannot be paid from ordinary revenues of the facility. 36 A.G. High School Bonds: Laws (now repealed) authorizing the issuance of county bonds for high school purposes were not violative of the provisions of Art. XIII, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Henderson v. Dawson County, 87 M 122, 286 P 125 (1930).

Use of Proceeds of Bridge Bonds: Funds provided by the sale of bonds by the County Commissioners for the purpose of constructing bridges, after securing the consent of the electors, may not be expended for any purpose other than that for which they have been provided. State ex rel. Furnish v. Mullendore, 53 M 109, 161 P 949 (1916).

Advances Paid on Invalid Bonds: A statute which authorizes payment of advances to a board of school trustees for the purpose of building a school, in reliance upon the proceeds of bonds which were declared to be invalid from the proceeds of the sale of bonds subsequently issued, was not invalid under Art. XIII, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Dickerman, 16 M 278, 40 P 698 (1895).

Case Notes

Distribution of TransADE Funds Compliant With Constitutional Requirement for Strict Accountability of Public Funds: In a challenge to the Department of Transportation's TransADE grant program providing funds for transportation services to elderly and disabled persons, the petitioner asserted that the Legislature's delegation of legislative authority to the Department in 7-14-112 and the Department's delegation to lead grantees to oversee the disbursement of grant funds violates Art. VIII, sec. 12, Mont. Const., by failing to provide strict accountability of public funds. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed and held that the Legislature responded to the nonself-executing mandate of Art. VIII, sec. 12, Mont. Const, by assigning audit power to the Legislative Auditor and requiring the Auditor to conduct financial and compliance audits of each state agency every 2 years. This audit power is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of providing strict accountability for the use of public funds. Mont. Independent Living Project v. St., 2019 MT 298, 398 Mont. 204, 454 P.3d 1216.

Nonjusticiable — Clause Not Self-Executing: This section is not self-executing because it is addressed to the Legislature. It is therefore a nonjusticiable political question that does not grant taxpayers a right to judicial relief. Mitchell v. Glacier County, 2017 MT 258, 389 Mont. 122, 406 P.3d 427, following Columbia Falls Elementary School District No. 6 v. St., 2005 MT 69, 326 Mont. 304, 109 P.3d 257.

Housing Act of 1975: The Legislature provided for strict accountability of funds, and the Housing Act of 1975 does not violate this section. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976), followed in Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984) (coal severance tax water bonds).

Budget a Legislative Function: Notwithstanding Art. VI, sec. 9, Mont. Const., the budget is a legislative budget, not an executive budget. Article V, sec. 1 and 11, and Art. VIII, sec. 9, 12, and 14, Mont. Const., vest not only the power to approve appropriation bills and a budget in the legislative branch but to create an interim committee to gather information from other branches of government necessary to form a rational basis for its budget determinations. State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Fin. Comm., 168 M 470, 543 P2d 1317 (1975).

Gift to Private Nonprofit Corporation: Under 20-8-111, the Board of Public Education, in its discretion, may give money that has been donated for the use and benefit of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind to a private nonprofit corporation created and controlled by the Board and operated for the benefit of that school. However, the Board remains accountable for the money until it is used directly for the general support, maintenance, or improvement of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind. 38 A.G. Use of In-State Investment Fund to Guarantee Private Loans or Bonds Unconstitutional: The provisions of 17-6-308, which permit the use of in-state investment fund money derived from taxation to guarantee loans or bonds of private individuals or private entities either directly or through the capital reserve account or through the economic development guaranty fund, are unconstitutional under subsection (1) of this section providing for a unified investment program, insofar as 17-6-308 allows guaranties of private obligations as permissible investments. Hollow v. St., 222 M 478, 723 P2d 227, 43 St. Rep. 1435 (1986).

Housing Act of 1975: The provisions of this section for the unified investment fund do not require that all agencies participate regardless of the nature of the agency. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976), followed in Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984) (coal severance tax water bonds).

"Bonds Fully Guaranteed": Under Art. XXI, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., which defined permissible investments for the Montana trust and legacy fund, the phrase "bonds fully guaranteed" meant "instruments in writing constituting a promise to pay a sum certain with interest at a definite rate, to a holder or bearer by a defined future date, which are fully guaranteed at 100% of their face value provided the sale price is not less than the purchase price". In re Mont. Trust & Legacy Fund, 143 M 218, 388 P2d 366 (1964).

Sale of Securities — Selling Price: The securities which constitute funds included in Art. XXI, 1889 Mont. Const., could have been sold before maturity for the benefit of the funds and the state institutions for which they were created and may even be sold for less than face value provided that the sale price is not less than the purchase price. In re Mont. Trust & Legacy Fund, 143 M 218, 388 P2d 366 (1964).

State Insurance Act — Investment of Fund: The claim that by reason of the provision of the state insurance laws requiring fund thereunder collected to be invested in Montana trust and legacy fund, sections 79-1201 to 79-1216, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), subject to limitations of this article, the credit of contributing counties and school districts is donated or loaned in violation of Art. XIII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., cannot be maintained. State ex rel. Missoula v. Holmes, 100 M 256, 47 P2d 624 (1935).

Public University Endowment Funds Not "Public Funds" — Not Required to be Invested Through Unified Investment Program: Article VIII, sec. 13, Mont. Const., does not require that endowments granted to Montana's public universities be invested through the unified investment program. 53 A.G. Op. 6 (2010).

Expenditure Limits Not Extended to Future Biennial Budget Cycles: A County Commissioner questioned whether 17-8-106 (enacted 1981) limited the power of subsequent Legislatures to appropriate funds by establishing a cap on expenditures in the 1981 budget biennium and for future biennial budget cycles. The Attorney General noted that, consistent with constitutional design, the Legislature lacks the power to pass a law that purports to establish binding legislative spending policy for future Legislatures. Each Legislature is vested with full legislative power, and there is no cap on state spending in the Montana Constitution. Thus, the 1981 enactment of 17-8-106 placed no enforceable limits on the spending power of subsequent Legislatures. 51 A.G. Op. 4 (2005).

Amount of Funding Indefinite — Certainty Upon Sale of Bonds: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The plaintiff contended that H.B. 846, L. 1981, whereby the Legislature authorized issuance of up to $10 million in coal severance tax bonds for the state's share of construction costs of Tongue River Dam rehabilitation, violated Art. VIII, sec. 14, and Art. IX, sec. 5, Mont. Const., in that the amount of money necessary to finance the project was not definite or certain. The court found that at the time of the bill's passage, it was impossible for the Legislature to determine the exact cost. The authorization is contingent on legislative approval of a detailed project plan. Sections 17-5-709 and 17-5-710 place limits on the bonds that may be issued. The court found that no legislative assembly can be expected to predict the interest rate which will meet the market for the issuance of state bonds. The court found that when the bonds are issued and sold, the interest rate to be paid by the state will become certain. The amounts necessary to service and repay the indebtedness will be definite. The court relied on State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925), which held "that is certain which can be made certain" to uphold the authorization for the project. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Bonded Debt — Not Invalid as Continuing Appropriation: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The bonds would be financed by coal severance taxes to provide proceeds for development of state water resources. Plaintiff contended that this was an invalid "continuing appropriation". Plaintiff contended that the 48th Legislature by enacting the program could not constitutionally bind future Legislatures to "appropriate" the coal tax money necessary to service the bonds; that the principal of the coal severance tax trust funds had been invaded for years; and that each bond issue requires a separate appropriation of coal severance tax revenues by a three-fourths vote of each house of the Legislature. The Supreme Court harmonized the various constitutional provisions involved. The court held that the Legislature can authorize long-term borrowing by issuing and selling bonds and can provide for the servicing for such indebtedness by repayment or refunding. The court found nothing making the coal severance tax trust fund immune from use as a source of funding for long-term state bonds. When the Legislature validly acts to establish a debt, that indebtedness becomes a state obligation extending over the life of the indebtedness, and every succeeding legislative assembly has an unavoidable duty to provide for it in the manner required by the authorizing law. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Money Derived Under Housing Act of 1975: The money derived under the Housing Act of 1975 is not derived by taxation and need not be handled in the manner prescribed by this section. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976).

State Money Exempt From Execution: The state cannot be a judgment debtor because an execution would result in the impairment of sovereign powers and would be contrary to public policy and because construction would not result in the state gaining any beneficial powers. First Nat'l Bank v. Sourdough Land & Cattle Co., 171 M 390, 558 P2d 654 (1976).

Budget Legislative Function: Notwithstanding Art. VI, sec. 9, Mont. Const., the budget is a legislative budget, not an executive budget. Article V, sec. 1 and 11, and Art. VIII, sec. 9, 12, and 14, Mont. Const., vest not only the power to approve appropriation bills and a budget in the legislative branch but to create an interim committee to gather information from other branches of government necessary to form a rational basis for its budget determinations. State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Fin. Comm., 168 M 470, 543 P2d 1317 (1975).

APPLICABILITY

Korean War Honorarium: Statute amending initiative act providing for honorarium for World War II veterans so as to make Korean veterans eligible to receive honorariums did not violate Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const. Cottingham v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 134 M 1, 328 P2d 907 (1958), overruled on other grounds in State ex rel. Ward v. Anderson, 158 M 279, 491 P2d 871 (1971).

Aviation Gasoline Tax Regulatory Rather Than Revenue Measure: Practical operation of the aviation gasoline tax placed burden of paying 1 cent per gallon tax on user of gasoline for aviation purposes. Because income generated is used to regulate aviation operators, it was clearly a regulatory rather than a revenue measure, and as such was not subject to constitutional provisions relating to taxation. The constitutional provisions relating to taxation have no application to license fees or taxes imposed for regulatory purposes as distinguished from property taxes. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948), overruled in Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975).

Inapplicable to Highway Treasury Anticipation Debenture Act: Article V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., was inapplicable to Highway Treasury Anticipation Debenture Act of 1945 (omitted). Pioneer Motors, Inc. v. Highway Comm'n, 118 M 333, 165 P2d 796 (1946).

Inapplicable to License Fees: Section providing that the treasurer of the Montana State Board of Food Distributors (since abolished) was the custodian of the license fees collected and that disbursements shall be made by it did not offend against Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const., since the license fees collected are for a specific purpose and are not taxes collected for the ordinary expenses of state or municipal government. Cramer v. Bd. of Food Distrib., 113 M 450, 129 P2d 96 (1942), overruled in Jones v. Burns, 138 M 268, 357 P2d 22 (1960).

Inapplicable to Funds From School Land Grants: The State Board of Education was vested with exclusive power to receive and control the funds derived from lands granted the state for the use of its institutions of learning. Therefore, it is free from the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution as to the expenditures of the ordinary revenues of the state. State ex rel. Blume v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 371, 34 P2d 515 (1934).

"Public Debt": Under Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., the term "public debt" embraced floating debt evidenced by warrants as well as bonded indebtedness. State ex rel. Palmer v. Hickman, 11 M 541, 29 P 92 (1892).

APPROPRIATION MADE BY LAW

"Appropriations Made by Law" Construed: While Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that no money shall be paid out of the treasury except upon "appropriations made by law", did not require the introduction of an appropriation bill and was satisfied if the people have expressed an intention that the money in question be paid, the mere duty of the Legislature to make adequate appropriations for what it requires to be done does not constitute an appropriation "made by law", any more than a promise of the government to pay money or make an appropriation. State ex rel. Dean v. Brandjord, 108 M 447, 92 P2d 273 (1939).

Effect of Initiative: Since initiative does not appropriate money out of the treasury, the provision of Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application to such measure. Martin v. Highway Comm'n, 107 M 603, 88 P2d 41 (1939).

Refund of Taxes — Appropriation Required: Section 15-16-601 (now repealed), authorizing the commissioners to order a refund of erroneously or illegally collected taxes, was inoperative insofar as it provided that the State Auditor must draw his warrant for the state's portion of the taxes. The Auditor was prohibited by law from drawing a warrant in the absence of legislative appropriation to cover it. First Nat'l Bank v. Sanders County, 85 M 450, 279 P 247 (1929).

Appropriation Bill Not Required: Section of the Constitution providing that no money shall be paid out of the state treasury except upon appropriation "made by law" does not require the introduction of an appropriation bill, the requirement being met by an appropriation sanctioned by law. State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925).

Escheated Property: When a judgment ordered the State Auditor to draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for the payment of money held as escheated property although the Legislature had not made an appropriation for that purpose, it was invalid as in direct conflict with Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const. In re Pomeroy, 51 M 119, 151 P 333 (1915).

Lawful Appropriation Required: When relator applied for a Writ of Mandate to compel the State Auditor to draw his warrant for the payment of an account due it for printing, under a statute providing that the Governor and Auditor shall examine the "itemized accounts" of the contractor, which shall be rendered "once in each month", and "if they find it to be correct and in accordance with the provisions of the law, the Auditor shall draw his warrant on the territorial treasurer for the payment of the same", the relator was not entitled, under Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., to the relief demanded in the absence of a lawful appropriation. State ex rel. Journal Publishing Co. v. Kenney, 9 M 389, 24 P 96 (1890).

Appropriation by Constitution: When the State Treasurer refused to pay a warrant drawn on him by the State Auditor in favor of the Secretary of State upon the ground that no appropriation had been made by law for the payment of any warrant issued to state officers for their services, the Treasurer was required to pay the warrant. The provision of the Constitution that certain enumerated officers shall receive the compensations specified therein is an appropriation made by law, and no legislative act is necessary. State ex rel. Rotwitt v. Hickman, 9 M 370, 23 P 740 (1890). See State ex rel. Buck v. Hickman, 10 M 497, 24 P 93 (1891).

SPECIAL FUNDS

Inapplicability: The provisions of Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const., were inapplicable to special funds. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948), overruled in Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975); State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935); State ex rel. Missoula v. Holmes, 100 M 256, 47 P2d 624 (1935); State ex rel. Hawkins v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 97 M 441, 35 P2d 116 (1934); State ex rel. Veeder v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 121, 33 P2d 516 (1934).

Special Trust Funds: Article V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application to special or trust funds which had never been placed in the general funds of the state. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948).

Inapplicable to State Insurance Fund: State insurance fund, sections 173.2 to 173.20, R.C.M. 1935 (now repealed), was a special fund designated for a specific purpose as to which Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application. State ex rel. Missoula v. Holmes, 100 M 256, 47 P2d 624 (1935).

Erection of Buildings: Since Ch. 7, Ex. L. 1933 (not codified), dealt only with a special fund provided for therein, provisions thereof relating to the method of making disbursements for the erection of the buildings authorized did not violate Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Blume v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 371, 34 P2d 515 (1934).

Funds From Operation of Buildings: As to laws having to do only with a special fund derived from the operation of the buildings authorized to be constructed from student fees, gifts, and bequests, and to be devoted to a special purpose, the provisions of Art. V, sec. 34, 1889 Mont. Const., had no application. State ex rel. Veeder v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 121, 33 P2d 516 (1934).

MISCELLANEOUS

Payment of Money Not in Treasury: The Board of Examiners in making settlement with an insurance company on cancellation of a contract after defeat of the state insurance act referendum by permitting the insurer to retain the portion of the unearned premium and applying it on a new policy did not contravene Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const. The contract for new insurance had been executed by the Board and the claim for premium was no longer unliquidated, and the sum retained was not then in the treasury. Fitzpatrick v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 105 M 234, 70 P2d 285 (1937).

Treasury Notes — Payment by Treasurer: Law was not rendered invalid for failing to provide payment of principal and interest of treasury notes on warrant drawn by the State Auditor and in providing for payment directly by the State Treasurer. State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925).

Payment of Funds Into State Treasury: The only reasonable construction of Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const., which required all taxes be paid into the state treasury, in connection with a provision that the County Treasurer shall be the collector, is that the collector shall collect and then pay into the treasury all taxes levied for state purposes. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Martien, 27 M 437, 71 P 470 (1903).

Transfer of Money Between State Treasury Accounts — Statutory Appropriation Not Required: This section requires a statutory appropriation only when money is paid out of the state treasury, but neither the constitution nor state law requires a statutory appropriation when money is transferred between accounts within the state treasury. 44 A.G. Op. 43 (1992).

Applicability of Budget Amendment Process to Statutory Appropriations: Legislative history and case law support the conclusion that the scope of the budget amendment process is restricted to the expenditure of funds by state agencies in excess of their appropriations. The budget amendment process does not apply to "statutory appropriations", which are those appropriations accomplished by legislative enactment, either with or without specific appropriation laws. 40 A.G. Op. 25 (1983).

Role of Montana Wheat Research and Marketing Committee in Political Action and Legal Action: "Marketing" is to be interpreted in its broadest sense to include the transportation of goods, including transportation rates. The Committee may take action to assure reasonable transportation rates if it is in the best interest of the wheat and barley growers of Montana as a whole. Political action, not legal action, is prohibited. Although in some situations, lawsuits against purchasers or growers of wheat or barley for violation of the wheat research and marketing statutes must be brought by the Department of Agriculture, that requirement did not govern a situation when the litigation in question was brought not merely to enforce the procedural requirements of the wheat research and marketing statutes but also to assure reasonable transportation rates. Actual use of Committee funds for permissible legal action is impermissible if the use of the funds is not under state control. The Committee also is prohibited from contributing to a legal fund over which it has no control; however, the Committee is not prohibited from engaging indirectly in litigation by funding research if it controls the expenditure of the funds for the studies by way of contract or agreement. 39 A.G. Op. 8 (1981).

Appropriations — Legislative Control Over Marketing Assessment Funds: Although the control of the Legislature over appropriations to state agencies is based upon broad constitutional provisions, certain money may either be exempt from the appropriation process or the purposes for which that money may be appropriated may be limited by statute. Thus, the Legislature may control appropriations from the wheat marketing and research account but those appropriations are subject to the statutorily stated purposes of the account. Any attempt by the Legislature in an appropriation bill to alter the purposes for which appropriations from the account are made is subject to the constitutional restriction that the purpose of legislation must be clearly stated in the title of the bill. 39 A.G. Op. 3 (1981).

State Control Over Financial Consequences of Pension Plan Associated With Public Employment — Retirement Policy Rationally Related to Government Interest: Plaintiff challenged the statutory scheme governing the eligibility for public pensions for employees who work for a school district, retire, and then work for the University System. The District Court held that the statutory proscription in 19-21-202 that prevents a retired teacher from receiving benefits from a state-sponsored retirement program while remaining an employee and contributing member of another private retirement program violated the constitutional right to equal protection. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the rational basis test and reversed. There remains nothing irrational about the state deciding that at any one time, a public employee should not be both drawing a new salary and accruing a public pension and receiving an old public pension. When the job and its associated pension plan involve public employment, the state's interest in and control over the financial consequences are a legitimate exercise of the constitutional mandate in this section, and the District Court incorrectly held that the statutory scheme was an equal protection violation. Farrier v. Teachers' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 229, 328 M 375, 120 P3d 390 (2005).

Constitutional Authority of Public Employees' Retirement Board to Make Actuarial Calculations — No Overbroad Delegation of Legislative Authority: The District Court held that 2001 amendments contained in House Bill No. 294, which included a definition of actuarial equivalent that changed the method by which the Public Employees' Retirement Board calculated certain benefits, unconstitutionally delegated unconstrained discretion to the Board in violation of the separation of powers doctrine in Art. III, sec. 1, Mont. Const. On appeal, the Board asserted that this section gave the Board the authority to make actuarial evaluations and thus to implement the 2001 amendments, so there was no constitutional violation. The Supreme Court agreed. Article III, sec. 1, Mont. Const., allows one branch of government to exercise power properly belonging to another branch if the constitution expressly directs or permits that exercise. Because this section delegated authority to the Board to make actuarial determinations, the District Court committed reversible error in concluding that the Legislature and House Bill No. 294 (2001) unconstitutionally delegated authority to the Board to make determinations allowed by another section of the constitution. Baumgardner v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 199, 328 M 179, 119 P3d 77 (2005), following Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ.-N., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179 (1997).

Judgment Against "State" Binding Against Two Agencies — Retirement Benefits Setoff Barred as Compulsory Counterclaim: During a longstanding dispute by firefighters employed by the Montana Air National Guard and involving several separate lawsuits, the plaintiff was fired and began receiving retirement benefits. The plaintiff sued "the State" for reinstatement of employment, lost wages, employment benefits during the period of termination, liquidated damages, and attorney fees and costs. After other firefighters' suits were decided in the firefighters' favor, the plaintiff settled with the Department of Military Affairs (DMA) for reinstatement, lost wages, lost annual leave and sick leave benefits, retirement contributions that the DMA would have made during the termination period, and attorney fees and costs of suit. After settlement, the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) claimed that it was entitled to repayment of the retirement benefits that the plaintiff had been paid before reinstatement. The DMA and PERS agreed to offset the settlement damages by the retirement amount. The Supreme Court held that the state's setoff claim was barred as a compulsory counterclaim, that both agencies were bound by the DMA's settlement agreement because they were the same party collectively known as the "State of Montana", and that the plaintiff was entitled to the full settlement amount without setoff. Peters v. St., 285 M 345, 948 P2d 250, 54 St. Rep. 1185 (1997).

Interpretation of Agency Rule Consistent With Water Quality Act — Arbitrary and Capricious Application: An environmental group filed a lawsuit against the state Department of Environmental Quality challenging a modified water discharge permit issued to a mining company. The plaintiff alleged that the Department's interpretation of its administrative rules regarding waters with ephemeral characteristics was unlawful and that terms of the permit allowed by the agency were arbitrary and capricious. After the District Court granted summary judgment for the plaintiff, the Department appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the agency's interpretation was consistent with the Water Quality Act and deferred to its interpretation of its regulations. However, the Supreme Court also determined that the Department arbitrarily and capriciously applied its interpretation during the permitting process and remanded the matter for further factfinding. Mont. Envtl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2019 MT 213, 397 Mont. 161, 451 P.3d 493.

Imposition of Attorney Fees Under Private Attorney General Doctrine — Inapplicable When No Constitutional Provisions Directly Implicated: A Board of County Commissioners approved the construction of a bridge on the shore of Flathead Lake connecting the mainland to a privately owned island. An association successfully challenged the approval as a violation of the applicable county regulations and of Title 75, ch. 7, part 2, commonly known as the Lakeshore Protection Act, and requested attorney fees, claiming that the private attorney general doctrine was applicable because the litigation vindicated constitutional interests, including enforcement of the duty to maintain a clean and healthful environment described in Art. IX, sec. 1, Mont. Const. On review, the Supreme Court found that the association did not vindicate a constitutional interest because the litigation had focused on the Board's compliance or failure to comply with regulations and statutes, rather than directly addressing any constitutional provisions. Community Ass'n for N. Shore Conserv., Inc. v. Flathead County, 2019 MT 147, 396 Mont. 194, 445 P.3d 1195.

Leasing State Land Mineral Interests Without Environmental Review — No Violation of Right to Clean and Healthful Environment: Plaintiffs sought declaratory rulings that the State Land Board wrongfully failed to conduct environmental studies required by the Montana Constitution prior to entering leases with the coal company. Section 77-1-121(2) expressly exempts the State Land Board from conducting any environmental review under the Montana Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) prior to issuing a lease as long as the lease is subject to further state permitting regulations. The Supreme Court held that because the leases did not remove any action by the coal company from environmental review or regulation provided by Montana law, such environmental review was only deferred from the leasing stage to the permitting stage. The terms of the leases required the coal company to comply with all applicable state and federal laws and specifically with Montana laws regarding mine siting and reclamation as well as with the provisions of MEPA. Because the leases themselves did not allow for any degradation of the environment, the act of issuing the leases without environmental review under 77-1-121(2), did not violate Article II, section 3, or Article IX, section 1, 2, or 3, of the Montana Constitution. N. Plains Resource Council v. Mont. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 2012 MT 234, 366 Mont. 399, 288 P.3d 169.

Civil, Private, and Attractive Nuisance and Trespass Claims Against Shooting Range — Opportunity to Further Develop Certain Claims Allowed on Remand: After an individual defendant transferred property to defendant ranch company and helped the ranch develop a shooting range on the property, plaintiff neighbors brought multiple claims alleging that operation of the shooting range in close proximity to a subdivision and elementary school constituted a public nuisance, private nuisance, attractive nuisance, trespass, and a violation of various constitutional provisions. The District Court dismissed all claims and plaintiffs appealed. Citing Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 Mont. 76, 979 P.2d 1275, the Supreme Court noted that the Legislature explicitly exempted shooting ranges from civil nuisance liability, so plaintiffs' public nuisance claims were properly dismissed. Regarding the private nuisance claims, the District Court should have focused on injury to specific plaintiffs rather than dismissing the claims as related to all plaintiffs. The trespass claims concerned noise from the shooting range invading plaintiffs' property and thus took the form of intangible trespass. The District Court prematurely dismissed the trespass claims by failing to recognize that an intangible invasion supported by actual damages may support a trespass action, and plaintiffs should have been allowed to develop evidence and facts demonstrating actual damages. Plaintiffs should also have been allowed to develop facts of an actual threat of irreparable injury in support of the attractive nuisance claims. Lastly, plaintiffs failed to show how common law or statutory remedies would not adequately address any potential damages or to demonstrate how the constitutional provisions in question directly addressed the conduct of private parties, so the constitutional claims were properly dismissed. The case was remanded to allow plaintiffs the opportunity to develop their trespass and public, private, and attractive nuisance claims. Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Nonapplicability of Constitutional Tort Theory When Adequate Remedy Exists Under Statutory or Common Law: Plaintiffs brought a common-law action against defendant for restoration damages related to environmental damage caused by defendant's refinery. The trial court held defendant strictly liable for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and instructed the jury to award monetary damages pursuant to Art. II, sec. 3, Mont. Const., for any constitutional tort violating the fundamental right to a clean and healthful environment. Defendant appealed the application of the constitutional tort theory. The Supreme Court noted that Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002), recognized that common-law causes of action that are intended to regulate relationships among and between individuals may not always be adequate to redress the type of damage caused by the invasion of constitutional rights by government actors and that, as a result, recognition of a constitutional tort was necessary in the absence of any other remedy. However, in the present case, the Supreme Court also adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts 929 to allow for recovery of restoration damages, which served to ensure restoration of a clean and healthful environment. Absent a showing that restoration costs were inadequate to address potential damages caused by defendant's contamination, it was error for the trial court to instruct the jury on the constitutional tort theory when adequate remedies existed under statutory or common law. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007), followed in Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2007 MT 206, 338 M 541, 167 P3d 886 (2007).

Initiative Banning Cyanide Mining Not Unconstitutional Taking or Impairment of Contract — Opportunity to Apply for Mining Permit Not Property Right: Plaintiffs had an operating permit pending for a cyanide leach pit gold mine when voters passed Initiative Measure No. 137 (I-137) that prohibited cyanide mining in Montana. Plaintiffs sued on grounds that I-137 interfered with their property right in the permit, constituted an unconstitutional regulatory taking for which they should be compensated, and violated the contract clause in Art. II, sec. 31, Mont. Const. The District Court found for the state on all issues, and plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs' mere opportunity to seek a mining permit did not constitute a property right, given the state's wide discretion to reject the application even without the passage of I-137. Further, I-137 did not constitute a taking because plaintiffs had not yet obtained a right to mine that the initiative took away. Moreover, even though the District Court incorrectly held that plaintiffs' corporate mining agreement was not substantially impaired by I-137, the court nonetheless correctly concluded that there was no contract clause violation because I-137 was reasonably related to the legitimate and significant public purpose of protecting the environment. Seven Up Pete Venture v. St., 2005 MT 146, 327 M 306, 114 P3d 1009 (2005).

Water Appropriation Application Amendments So Significant as to Constitute New Appropriations — Original Applications Considered Shams — New Applications Barred by Subbasin Closure: Just 10 days before the Legislature closed the Bitterroot River subbasin to new water appropriations in 1999, defendants submitted four appropriation applications to develop ponds on their property for the beneficial use of wildlife. All four applications were subsequently amended to variously revise volume and flow rates, proposed pond depth, points and means of diversion, place of use, and beneficial uses. Numerous parties objected to the proposed appropriations, including plaintiff, which moved to terminate the applications on grounds that the amendments were submitted in bad faith and were new applications and that deficiencies in the applications were not cured within the statutory time limit. A hearings examiner denied the motion to terminate the applications, but nevertheless denied the applications on numerous grounds. Defendants filed exceptions to the hearings examiner's decision, and the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation reversed the hearings examiner and granted all four applications. Plaintiff petitioned the District Court for review, and the court concluded that the Department erred in accepting and processing the amended applications after the subbasin closure and in other ways and denied the applications. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The amendments to the applications were not mere refinements, but constituted changes so significant that the amended applications bore such little resemblance to the original applications as to be considered shams. The nature and extent of the changes could be consistent only with new applications with new priority dates, which were prohibited by the subbasin closure. The Supreme Court noted that to hold otherwise would establish a precedent allowing a prospective appropriator to file a deficient application and later amend the application without penalty, thereby gaining an advantage over other appropriators and circumventing other restrictions associated with a subbasin closure. Bitterroot River Protective Ass'n, Inc. v. Siebel, 2005 MT 60, 326 M 241, 108 P3d 518 (2005).

Purpose of Alternative Livestock Transfer Regulations — Quarantine Exception to Commerce Clause Applicable: The Wallaces, licensed alternative livestock ranchers, sought to reduce the size of their elk herd by transferring about 500 elk to the Crow Indian Reservation for release into the wild. The Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks requested and received an injunction prohibiting any transfer of elk to tribal lands, and the Wallaces appealed, asserting that the injunction violated Art. I, sec. 8, clause 3, of the U.S. Constitution, known as the commerce clause. The Wallaces contended that prohibiting the transfer of alternative livestock to a recipient that is not licensed by the state constituted extraterritorial application of Montana's regulatory scheme to foreign nations, other states, and Indian nations in violation of federal law. The Supreme Court found that this case falls within the quarantine exception to the traditional commerce clause analysis. The quarantine exception recognizes that states may have a local interest in protecting public safety as a competing value when reviewing state burdens on interstate commerce. With the alarming spread of serious wildlife diseases throughout the country, the state has a compelling interest to enact regulations to ensure that alternative livestock cannot simply roam into Montana and threaten native populations. Because elk released on the Crow Indian Reservation could migrate back into Montana, the restrictions regarding transfer of alternative livestock in 87-4-414 fall squarely within the quarantine exception to the commerce clause. Thus, the permanent injunction was affirmed. Hagener v. Wallace, 2002 MT 109, 309 M 473, 47 P3d 847 (2002). See also Bowman v. Chicago & NW. Ry. Co., 125 US 465 (1888).

No Reasonable Expectation of Privacy in Possession of Game Fish — Probable Cause Not Required for Game Warden's Inspection of Angler's Concealed Catch: Initially concerned for the safety of the occupants of a seemingly unoccupied watercraft, a game warden approached the watercraft. When informed that Boyer had been fishing, the warden asked to see Boyer's license and catch. After Boyer requested a later inspection, he reluctantly exhibited eight fish. At that point, the warden looked into the live well of Boyer's boat, and in the process found unlawfully killed game fish. Boyer contended that the warden needed probable cause to believe that Boyer had committed a violation at the time that the request was made in order to inspect his catch, and that conducting a warrantless search of Boyer's live well was impermissible. The Supreme Court noted that under the Montana Constitution, an impermissible search occurs only when a reasonable expectation of privacy exists. To determine whether the warden unlawfully intruded into Boyer's privacy, the court considered: (1) whether Boyer had an actual expectation of privacy; (2) whether society was willing to recognize that expectation as objectively reasonable; and (3) the nature of the state's intrusion (see St. v. Bassett, 1999 MT 109, 294 M 327, 982 P2d 410 (1999)). The court concluded that Boyer's subjective expectation of privacy in his catch was not one that society would recognize as reasonable. This section, the state must maintain a clean and healthful environment, and the Legislature has provided for game wardens to enforce the environmental laws regarding fish and game by implementing a system that includes the ability of wardens to inspect game in the field, which encompasses proper licensing and game limitation requirements. In this capacity, wardens act as public trustees protecting and conserving Montana wildlife and habitat for all citizens. Fishing is a privilege accorded by the state, not a private right, and anglers must assume the burdens of the sport, as well as its benefits, and acknowledge the prospect of at least some governmental intrusion into their activities, including license checks, inquiries about game taken, and requests to inspect game in the field. Because Boyer had no reasonable expectation of privacy in his catch, the warden's request for and inspection of the catch was not considered a search, so probable cause was not necessary. St. v. Boyer, 2002 MT 33, 308 M 276, 42 P3d 771 (2002).

Unenforceability of Buy-Sell Agreement on Grounds of Impossibility or Impracticality of Performance — Requiring Performance of Contract With Potential for Environmental Degradation Unconstitutional: Cape-France Enterprises (Cape-France) entered a buy-sell agreement with Peed (now deceased) and Moore to purchase some property near Bozeman for a subdivision. Before the subdivision could be completed, water needed to be procured for the site. According to the agreement, as buyers, Peed and Moore were responsible to bring water to the property, but because city water was not available, a well needed to be drilled. However, the presence of a pollution plume was discovered near the land. After the subdivision process was commenced, the Department of Environmental Quality notified Cape-France that: (1) the plume may have advanced under the property; (2) a subdivision would not be approved unless a well was drilled and tested; (3) a well could be drilled, but if testing showed pollution in the water, treatment would be extensive; and (4) if drilling or pumping of the water caused expansion of the pollution, then Cape-France, as owner of the property, would be held liable for cleanup costs. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court held that the buy-sell agreement could be rescinded on the basis of mutual mistake of fact and impossibility or impracticality of performance and that specific performance would not be granted. The Supreme Court affirmed. A court may determine that an act is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable, when the act can be done only at an excessive, unreasonable, and unbargained-for cost. The doctrine of impossibility or impracticability is applied when, aside from the object of a contract being unlawful, the public policy underlying the strict performance of the contract is outweighed by the senselessness of requiring performance. The doctrine is not limited to cases of literal impossibility but may also be applied in cases that present a potential for substantial and unbargained-for damages. In this case, requiring Cape-France to go forward with the performance of the contract when there was a very real possibility of substantial environmental degradation and resultant financial liability for cleanup was not in the public interest or in the interests of the contracting parties and was not in accord with the guarantee of a clean and healthful environment in Art. II, sec. 3, Mont. Const., or the mandate to maintain and improve a clean and healthful environment for present and future generations in this section. Thus, rescission of the contract was proper. Cape-France Enterprises v. Estate of Peed, 2001 MT 139, 305 M 513, 29 P3d 1011 (2001). See also Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977), and Mont. Envtl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 1999 MT 248, 296 M 207, 988 P2d 1236 (1999).

Arbitrary, Blanket Exclusion of Certain Activities From Nondegradation Review Unconstitutional as Applied — Actual Danger Not Required — Degradation of Environment Sufficient to Implicate Fundamental Rights: The District Court erred when it held that the fundamental right to a clean and healthy environment is not implicated unless there is a finding of actual injury and that mere degradation of water quality, absent actual injury, is not sufficient to implicate the fundamental right or to require strict scrutiny analyses. The right to a clean and healthful environment contained in Art. II, sec. 3, Mont. Const., is fundamental. Therefore, as applied to the facts of this case, to the extent that 75-5-317(2)(j) arbitrarily excludes certain activities from nondegradation review without regard to the nature or volume of the substance being discharged, it violates the environmental rights guaranteed by Art. II, sec. 3, Mont. Const., and this section. (See 1999 amendments.) The intention of the framers of the constitution was to provide language and protections that are both anticipatory and preventative. The delegates did not intend to merely prohibit that degree of environmental degradation that can be conclusively linked to ill health or physical endangerment. Mont. Envtl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 1999 MT 248, 296 M 207, 988 P2d 1236, 56 St. Rep. 964 (1999).

Fundamental Right to Clean and Healthful Environment — Strict Scrutiny of Compelling State Interest and Nondegradation Policy: The right to a clean and healthful environment contained in Art. II, sec. 3, Mont. Const., is fundamental. Any statute or rule implicating that right will be strictly scrutinized and will survive scrutiny only if the state establishes a compelling state interest and its action is closely tailored to effectuate that interest and is the least onerous path that can be taken to meet the state's objectives. Because rights provided for in this section are not found in the declaration of rights, a statute implicating rights under this section would normally be subject to a middle-tier scrutiny test. However, those rights guaranteed by Art. II, sec. 3, and those rights provided for in this section were intended by the constitution's framers to be interrelated and interdependent, so state action under either section is subject to strict scrutiny. Mont. Envtl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 1999 MT 248, 296 M 207, 988 P2d 1236, 56 St. Rep. 964 (1999). See also Butte Community Union v. Lewis, 219 M 426, 712 P2d 1309, 43 St. Rep. 65 (1986), and Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996).

Standing to Challenge Mining Activity With Arguably Adverse Environmental Impact: Plaintiffs' uncontroverted allegations of a violation of their right to a clean and healthful environment established their standing to challenge mine water discharge activities that had an arguably adverse impact on the headwaters of the Blackfoot River in which they fished and recreated and that was a source of their drinking water. Mont. Envtl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 1999 MT 248, 296 M 207, 988 P2d 1236, 56 St. Rep. 964 (1999), following Missoula City-County Air Pollution Control Bd. v. Bd. of Envtl. Review, 282 M 255, 937 P2d 463, 54 St. Rep. 338 (1997), and Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 699 (1997).

Environmental Impact Statement Not Given Constitutional Status: An environmental impact statement (EIS) was not required before granting a permit under the Hard-Rock Mining Act (HRMA) because the 60-day period was a woefully inadequate period for the preparation of a proper EIS, the same reason that an EIS was not required in Flint Ridge Dev. Co. v. Scenic Rivers Ass'n, 426 US 776 (1976). Furthermore, the statutory requirement of an EIS was not given constitutional status by the enactment of Art. II, sec. 3, and Art. IX, sec. 1, Mont. 1974 Amendment by Referendum: Constitutional Amendment No. 1, proposed by Ch. 117, L. 1974, and approved at the general election held November 5, 1974, inserted (2) and (3) establishing the resource indemnity trust fund and requiring that the principal remain forever inviolate in the amount of $1 million. Amendment effective July 1, 1975. (See text of referendum in final volume of 1975 Laws of Montana.)

Environmental Group Precluded From Relitigating Similar Claims — Collateral Estoppel — Mine Reclamation: In 2011, the plaintiff, an environmental group, sued the defendants, the Department of Environmental Quality and a mining company, relating to a proposed open pit mine. The group argued that the Department's plan to reclaim the pit violated Art. IX, sec. 2, Mont. Const., because it did not require the natural resources to be "fully reclaimed" to their previous condition. The District Court ruled in favor of the Department and the mining company in a final order, and there was no appeal. In 2014, the plaintiff sued the defendants again regarding a similar open pit and reclamation plan. The plaintiff made the same constitutional argument as in the 2011 action, in addition to alleging that the plan violated the Montana Metal Mine Reclamation Act (MMRA). The District Court concluded that the plaintiff was collaterally estopped from relitigating the issue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that although the plan involved a different pit and MMRA theory, the factual differences were of no legal significance. Mont. Envtl. Information Center. v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2016 MT 9, 382 Mont. 102, 365 P.3d 454.

Leasing State Land Mineral Interests Without Environmental Review — No Violation of Right to Clean and Healthful Environment: Plaintiffs sought declaratory rulings that the State Land Board wrongfully failed to conduct environmental studies required by the Montana Constitution prior to entering leases with the coal company. Section 77-1-121(2) expressly exempts the State

Land Board from conducting any environmental review under the Montana Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) prior to issuing a lease as long as the lease is subject to further state permitting regulations. The Supreme Court held that because the leases did not remove any action by the coal company from environmental review or regulation provided by Montana law, such environmental review was only deferred from the leasing stage to the permitting stage. The terms of the leases required the coal company to comply with all applicable state and federal laws and specifically with Montana laws regarding mine siting and reclamation as well as with the provisions of MEPA. Because the leases themselves did not allow for any degradation of the environment, the act of issuing the leases without environmental review under 77-1-121(2), did not violate Article II, section 3, or Article IX, section 1, 2, or 3, of the Montana Constitution. No Constitutional Limitation on Appropriation of Resource Indemnity Trust Funds Beyond Principal: Nothing in the Montana Constitution as a whole or in the plain language of Art. IX, sec. 2, Mont. Const., places a limitation on the appropriation of resource indemnity trust funds beyond the $100 million principal, which must remain inviolate. Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Case Notes

Lakeside Property Dispute — Presumption That Grantee Takes Land to Low-Water Mark: In a property dispute relating to a subdivided lakeside parcel, the defendant asserted ownership of all land between the high- and low-water marks on the lake. The Army Corps of Engineers previously declared that the lake was a nonnavigable intrastate body and not subject to the Corps' jurisdiction. The District Court held that the plaintiff owned the land between the high- and low-water marks of the lake bordering her property. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that Montana's public trust easement was not at issue, that a conveyance of riparian property by reference to a specific metes and bounds description along the high-water mark is insufficient alone to overcome the presumption of 70-16-201 that the grantee takes at least to the low-water mark, and that the District Court correctly held that the plaintiff's property included the disputed land between the high- and low-water marks of the lake. Ash v. Merlette, 2017 MT 305, 389 Mont. 486, 407 P.3d 304.

Storage of Water Beneficial Use — BLM Held Stockwatering Rights for Use by Grazing Permittees — Multiple Appropriators Can Claim Water Rights from Same Source: The Water Court did not err in concluding that the United States Bureau of Land Management (BLM) held stockwatering rights under Montana law in reservoirs constructed on federal land for the use of grazing permittees. The Supreme Court recognized that storage of water as a beneficial use is expressly provided by the Montana Constitution and that the BLM was entitled to proceed under Montana law to appropriate water in its reservoirs for use by grazing permittees and others. It has long been the common law and then statutory law in Montana that multiple appropriators can claim water rights from the same source and that the first in time has the best right. While overappropriation creates its own issues, it does not mean that the person or entity that made the first use on a water source acquired the right to exclude any other person or entity from claiming water from the same source. A fundamental precept of Montana water law is that multiple claims can exist on a single source of water. U.S. v. Barthelemess Ranch Corp., 2016 MT 348, 386 Mont. 121, 386 P.3d 952.

Prior Appropriation Doctrine and Statute — Denial of Defense of Futile Call Proper: In a case involving water rights, the plaintiff senior appropriator sent a call to the defendant junior appropriator to cease diversions. Despite the call, the defendant junior appropriator continued to divert water and the plaintiffs filed suit. The District Court enjoined the defendant from continuing out-of-order diversions of water after receiving call letters. On appeal, the defendant argued that the plaintiffs were required to make calls on junior appropriators in reverse priority and that it established the necessary elements to raise the defense of futile call doctrine. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that nothing in the prior appropriation doctrine statute or judicial procedure required the plaintiffs to follow a specific method of making a call and that the District Court correctly found that the defendant had failed to establish the necessary elements to invoke the defense of futile call. Kelly v. Teton Prairie LLC, 2016 MT 179, 384 Mont. 174, 376 P.3d 143.

Water Court Not Required to Assign Separate Volume Limits — Water Right Place or Purpose of Use May Be Changed: The Water Court did not err when it chose not to assign separate volume limits for each of four sets of combined irrigation and stockwater rights. A water right cannot be enlarged beyond the original beneficial use by the original appropriator to the injury of others. However, place or purpose of use may be changed, subject to the complaints of another user. The purpose of the Water Use Act (Title 85, ch. 2) and adjudication process is to determine with finality the extent of all water rights in the state as of July 1, 1973. Any changes made to a right prior to the Water Use Act followed the no-injury rule, and any changes made after would require following the statutory procedures under the Water Use Act. The record did not indicate, nor did the parties argue, that another user was injured by a change to any of the named water rights' purposes or places of use prior to the Water Use Act. In re Eldorado Coop Canal Co., 2016 MT 94, 383 Mont. 205, 369 P.3d 1034.

Water Master's Flow Rate Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence — No Clear Error in Adopting Findings: The Water Court did not err when it limited the flow rate of a water right to 300 miner's inches instead of 225 miner's inches. Any competing water user's claim to the 75 inches of the right was addressed and resolved by the Water Master, who determined that no other party made claim to the portion of the right on a statement of claim. Furthermore, the claimant claimed the full 300 inches on its statement of claim, which the Water Court correctly stated is entitled to prima facie proof. The Water Court plainly analyzed the Master's factual findings to determine whether substantial evidence supported the findings, and found no clear error. In re Eldorado Coop Canal Co., 2016 MT 94, 383 Mont. 205, 369 P.3d 1034.

Place-of-Use Requirement — Water Supply Company's Claim of Service Area and Not Historic Place of Use Proper: The plaintiffs sued a water supply company after it locked the plaintiffs' headgate. The parties disputed the extent to which the company satisfied the place-of-use requirement. The company argued that the water rights it acquired prior to the Water Use Act (Title 85, ch. 2) extended to its claimed service area. The Water Master, however, concluded that the company's rights were limited to the boundaries of its historical use. The Water Court rejected the Water Master's conclusions. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the Water Court, holding that the concept of a service area is the proper method of satisfying the place-of-use requirement for a water service company. Curry v. Pondera County Canal & Reservoir Co., 2016 MT 77, 383 Mont. 93, 370 P.3d 440.

Rights of Water Supply Company — Measurement Based on Shares Authorized by Carey Land Board, Not Actual Acreage Irrigated: The plaintiffs sued a water supply company after it locked the plaintiffs' headgate. The plaintiffs argued that the company's water rights that were authorized by the Montana Carey Land Board (MCLB) extended only to the amount of actual acreage irrigated by the shareholders of the company, whereas the company claimed that its rights extended to the maximum number of shares authorized by the MCLB. The Water Master concluded that the company's rights extended to the actual acreage irrigated by the shareholders. The Water Court rejected the Water Master's conclusion, holding that the company's rights extended to the maximum number of shares authorized by the MCLB. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the Water Court's ruling, holding that the Water Master's conclusion ran contrary to the policy and intent of the Carey Land Act. Curry v. Pondera County Canal & Reservoir Co., 2016 MT 77, 383 Mont. 93, 370 P.3d 440.

Crow Compact Upheld — Compact Held Reasonable — Public Property and Water Rights Reasonable Under Compact — Public Comment Satisfied Due Process: Individual objectors to the Crow Water Compact appealed to the Supreme Court following the Water Court's determination that the Compact was valid. This action was subsequent to In re Crow Water Compact, 2015 MT 217, 380 Mont 168, 354 P.3d 1217. The objectors, who were not parties to the Compact but who owned land and water rights near the reservation, argued that the Water Court did not apply the proper legal standard, that they sustained injury because the Compact was unreasonable, and that their due process rights were violated during the Compact negotiation process. The Supreme Court disagreed with the objectors, holding that the Water Court correctly applied the correct standard articulated in Crow I, that the Compact was reasonable and had reasonable protection of state water and property rights, that the objectors' argument of future potential problems was beyond the scope of its review, that reservation of water for public recreation, wildlife, and aquatic life was for the benefit of the public, and that the record demonstrated sufficient opportunities for public comment during the Compact approval process. In re Crow Water Compact, 2015 MT 353, 382 Mont. 46, 364 P.3d 584.

Retroactive Applicability of 79 Ranch — Presumption of Abandonment Rebutted: The state appealed the Water Court's decision that the plaintiffs produced sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption that they abandoned their water right claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the Water Court properly retroactively applied 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 204 Mont. 426, 666 P.2d 215 (1983), in analyzing the abandonment of a pre-1973 water right and that the claimants submitted sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption of abandonment. Heavirland v. St., 2013 MT 313, 372 Mont. 300, 311 P.3d 813.

Leasing State Land Mineral Interests Without Environmental Review — No Violation of Right to Clean and Healthful Environment: Plaintiffs sought declaratory rulings that the State Land Board wrongfully failed to conduct environmental studies required by the Montana Constitution prior to entering leases with the coal company. Section 77-1-121(2) expressly exempts the State Land Board from conducting any environmental review under the Montana Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) prior to issuing a lease as long as the lease is subject to further state permitting regulations. The Supreme Court held that because the leases did not remove any action by the coal company from environmental review or regulation provided by Montana law, such environmental review was only deferred from the leasing stage to the permitting stage. The terms of the leases required the coal company to comply with all applicable state and federal laws and specifically with Montana laws regarding mine siting and reclamation as well as with the provisions of MEPA. Because the leases themselves did not allow for any degradation of the environment, the act of issuing the leases without environmental review under 77-1-121(2), did not violate Article II, section 3, or Article IX, section 1, 2, or 3, of the Montana Constitution. N. Plains Resource Council v. Mont. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 2012 MT 234, 366 Mont. 399, 288 P.3d 169.

Public Recreation and Conservation Interests in Water Adjudication Proceedings—Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Not Exclusive Representative: After the Water Court issued a temporary preliminary decree for the Big Hole River Basin, the objector filed timely objections to the claims of several claimants and requested a hearing. The Water Court granted summary judgment to the claimants on the basis that the objector lacked standing to file objections to the claims. The Supreme Court reversed. The Water Court erred in holding that under 85-2-223, only the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks may represent public recreation and conservation interests in water rights adjudications. Section 85-2-223 does not prohibit other entities from filing objections. No statutory or regulatory restrictions exist regarding who may file an objection to a water rights claim contained in a temporary preliminary decree. Mont. Trout Unlimited v. Beaverhead Water Co., 2011 MT 151, 361 Mont. 77, 255 P.3d 179.

Water Rights Adjudication — Standing to Object to Preliminary Decree: After the Water Court issued a temporary preliminary decree for the Big Hole River Basin, the objector filed timely objections to the claims of several claimants and requested a hearing. The Water Court granted summary judgment to the claimants on the basis that the objector lacked standing to file objections to the claims. Although the objector had sufficiently alleged environmental and recreational interests of its members that were distinct from those of the general public, the Water Court concluded such interests were not sufficient to demonstrate standing because the objector lacked ownership of a water right. The Supreme Court reversed. The Water Court erroneously applied the "good cause" requirement contained in 85-2-233 to require an ownership interest in a water right. When a party has met all common-law and statutory requirements for standing and has shown that its interest in the use of water has been affected by the decree, that party is entitled to object to a preliminary decree under 85-2-233. Mont. Trout Unlimited v. Beaverhead Water Co., 2011 MT 151, 361 Mont. 77, 255 P.3d 179.

No Right of Hydroelectric Facility to Make Free Appropriation of Water on State-Owned Land: A hydroelectric facility does not have the right to make free appropriation of water on and within state-owned land without paying compensation to the state. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, distinguishing Smith v. Deniff, 24 Mont. 20, 60 P 398 (1900), U.S. v. Conrad Invest. Co., 156 F 123 (D.C. Mont. 1907), and Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 Mont. 212, 215 P.3d 675. See also Prentice v. McKay, 38 Mont. 114, 98 P 1081 (1909).

Following the Montana Supreme Court's decision, PPL appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana court's ruling, holding that the Montana court had not properly considered the rivers in question on a segment-by-segment basis and had not determined whether they were navigable in fact at the time of statehood. The United States Supreme Court remanded the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion. PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Water Use Changes — Interaction of State Regulatory Authority and Tribal Self-Government: There are two general and overlapping approaches to analyzing the interaction of state regulatory authority and tribal self-government. The first takes the perspective of the tribe and seeks to identify the scope of authority that the tribe possesses (see Mont. v. U.S., 450 US 544 (1981)), while the second takes the perspective of the state and seeks to prescribe the limits of the state's power (see White Mtn. Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 US 136 (1980)). In cases adjudicating water rights, the weight of the state's interest depends in large part on the extent to which waterways or aquifers transcend the exterior boundaries of Indian country. In the case at bar, the District Court enjoined the state from processing a change of use application for a state water right. The question on appeal was whether the state had sovereign authority to process a change of use application concerning two appropriative water rights owned by non-Indians on the Flathead Reservation to allow a change from irrigation to recreation so that the owners could operate a waterski pond. Whether the change would adversely affect the tribe and whether assertion of regulatory authority by the state would have a direct effect on the tribes were legal conclusions. The Supreme Court concluded that the state's authority was not preempted by federal or tribal interests because neither the federal government nor the tribe asserted regulatory authority over the owner's water rights, so the state was not preempted from reviewing the change application. The Legislature acted within its constitutional prerogative in enacting 85-2-402, providing that no presumption is to work against a water right holder who seeks a change of use and providing that the state should be able to process change of use applications. The record was not clear whether the use change would adversely affect the tribe; however, the Supreme Court found no compelling reason to deprive the state water right holders of the opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the proposed change in use, not amount, would not adversely affect the use of other water rights, including the tribe's reserved rights. Therefore, the injunction was removed, and the case was remanded to the District Court for a determination of whether the state had sovereign authority to conduct change of use proceedings and, if so, to allow the owners to attempt to prove that the proposed change in use would not adversely affect the use of other water rights, including the tribe's reserved rights. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Clinch, 2007 MT 63, 336 M 302, 158 P3d 377 (2007).

Exercise of Original Supreme Court Jurisdiction Based on Statewide Importance of Tribal Water Rights: The Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes petitioned the Supreme Court to exercise original jurisdiction in a case involving the use of ground water on the Flathead Indian Reservation. The Supreme Court found this to be an appropriate case in which to exercise original jurisdiction because: (1) the petition implicated constitutional water rights issues under this section; (2) tribal water rights are of statewide importance; (3) the decisive issue was purely legal or constitutional; and (4) the normal litigation process was inadequate. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Stults, 2002 MT 280, 312 M 420, 59 P3d 1093 (2002), following In re Application for Beneficial Water Use Permit, 278 M 50, 923 P2d 1073 (1996), and Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Clinch, 1999 MT 342, 297 M 448, 992 P2d 244 (1999).

Issuance of Permits for Ground Water on Indian Reservations Precluded Until Tribes' Federally Reserved Water Rights Defined and Quantified: The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) granted a permit for the use of ground water on the Flathead Indian Reservation. Despite prior holdings in In re Application for Beneficial Water Use Permit, 278 M 50, 923 P2d 1073 (1996), and Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Clinch, 1999 MT 342, 297 M 448, 992 P2d 244 (1999), that the state does not have jurisdiction to issue new use permits prior to formal adjudication of the tribes' reserved water rights, DNRC contended that this case was distinguishable because the tribes' federally reserved water right concerning ground water is legally uncertain. However, the only federal authority cited by either party, Tweedy v. Tex. Co., 286 F. Supp. 383 (D.C. Mont. 1968), supported the conclusion that there is no distinction between surface water and ground water for purposes of determining what water rights are reserved because those rights are necessary to the purpose of an Indian reservation. Further, neither of the prior state cases excluded ground water. The tribes contended that as a sovereign nation, they should not be required to defend their water rights in piecemeal fashion before a hostile forum and that pursuant to 85-2-311 and the prior case law, the ground water permit was illegal. The Supreme Court agreed with the tribes and vacated the permit, finding no reason to limit the scope of the prior holdings by excluding ground water from the tribes' federally reserved water rights in this case. Two statutory methods for comprehensively adjudicating Indian reserved water rights already exist—a general inter sese adjudication or negotiations with the Montana Reserved Water Rights Compact Commission. Therefore, the tribes should not be required to defend their water rights by participating in the DNRC hearings process. Thus, DNRC cannot determine whether water is available on the Flathead Reservation, whether surface water or ground water, because DNRC cannot determine whether the issuance of permits would affect existing water rights until the tribes' preeminent water rights are defined and quantified. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Stults, 2002 MT 280, 312 M 420, 59 P3d 1093 (2002).

Fish, Wildlife, and Recreational Purposes as Valid Basis for Appropriative Water Use — Diversion Not Requisite Element of Appropriation When Diversion Not Required — Bean Lake Overruled: The Water Court ruled that five pre-1973 water rights claims based on diversions for fish, wildlife, or recreation were potentially invalid based on the holding in In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228 (1988), commonly known as the Bean Lake decision, because under Montana law before 1973, no appropriation right was recognized for fish, wildlife, or recreation except through a Murphy right statute. The Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the common-law elements of a valid appropriation are intent, notice, diversion, and application to a beneficial use and held that to the extent that the Bean Lake decision suggests that diversions for fish, wildlife, or recreation are not beneficial uses, that case is overruled. The court went on to address the Bean Lake rationale that claims for the nondiversionary use of water for fish, wildlife, or recreation are not recognized under the prior appropriation doctrine, noting that although most traditional uses necessitate a diversion for application to a beneficial use, the prior appropriation doctrine's history supports the holding that a diversion is not a requisite element of an appropriation when it is not a physical necessity for application to a beneficial use. Thus, instream and inlake appropriations for beneficial uses may be valid when the purpose does not require a diversion. Beneficial use rather than diversion is the touchstone of the prior appropriation doctrine. Montana has validated nondiversionary appropriations, so Montana law prior to 1973 cannot be said to absolutely require a diversion for a valid appropriation of water. The conclusion in the Bean Lake decision that the framers of the 1972 Montana Constitution did not accept fish, wildlife, or recreation uses as a valid basis for appropriative water rights is not reflected in the convention transcripts, which indicate that it was the fear of future limitations on fish, wildlife, and recreation rights, rather than a belief that those rights did not exist, that led to the deletion of proposed constitutional language specifically referencing those uses. Therefore, the Bean Lake conclusion that prior to 1973, Montana did not recognize appropriations for fish, wildlife, and recreation, whether diversionary or nondiversionary, was overruled. In re Adjudication of Existing Water Rights of Basin 41I, 2002 MT 216, 311 M 327, 55 P3d 396 (2002), distinguished in Mont. Trout Unlimited v. Beaverhead Water Co., 2011 MT 151, 361 Mont. 77, 255 P.3d 179.

Quantification of Tribal Water Rights Required — 1997 Amendment Unconstitutional: In an effort to avoid the result created by In re Application for Beneficial Water Use Permit, 278 M 50, 923 P2d 1073, 53 St. Rep. 777 (1996), the 1997 Legislature passed Senate Bill No. 97, which substantively eliminated the former protection of Indian reserved water rights provided by 82-5-311. The state conceded that the protection of existing water rights in this section includes water rights reserved for Indian reservations and contended that those rights were not affected by Senate Bill No. 97, but rather that those rights would be considered in that part of the analysis requiring that water be legally available. The state also pointed out the provisional nature of any water use permit and alleged that there were some uses that would not diminish instream flow and that use permits could thus be issued without affecting reserved Indian water rights, regardless of the quantification of those rights. However, under State ex rel. Greely v. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation, 219 M 76, 712 P2d 754 (1985), it was found that Indian reserved water rights are owned by the Indians, and because that ownership interest exists under federal law and does not depend on the use of the water, the Supreme Court was not persuaded that the state's permitting process might allow uses of Indian reserved water that in the long term might not diminish instream flows. The provisional nature of permits was not determinative either because use of water that may have been reserved by federal law for the tribes was no less impermissible simply because it was temporary and subject to termination following final quantification of the tribes' rights by adjudication or negotiation. Under the 1997 amendments, permits are still limited to water that is "legally available", but that phrase is not defined. Construing the phrase in a manner that sustains its constitutional validity, the Supreme Court interpreted "legally available" to mean that there is water available that, among other things, has not been federally reserved for Indian tribes. Therefore, as in In re Application for Beneficial Water Use Permit, the state cannot determine whether water is legally available on the Flathead Reservation because it cannot determine whether the issuance of permits would affect existing water rights until the tribes' rights are quantified by a compact negotiation under 85-2-702 or by a general inter sese water rights adjudication. To allow the issuance of water use permits on the reservation prior to quantification of the tribes' pervasive reserved right would require use of water that might belong to the tribes, in violation of this section, which protects existing water rights whether adjudicated or not. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Clinch, 1999 MT 342, 297 M 448, 992 P2d 244, 56 St. Rep. 1356 (1999).

Question of Issuance of Water Use Permits on Reservation Appropriate for Exercise of Supreme Court Original Jurisdiction: The Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes petitioned the Supreme Court to accept original jurisdiction and enjoin the state from issuing water use permits on the Flathead Indian Reservation until such time as the tribes' water rights were quantified. The state contended that this was not an appropriate case for the exercise of original jurisdiction because a factual record was necessary in order to determine whether the tribes' rights had been affected and that the appeal process was adequate for development of the factual and legal issues presented by the tribes' petition. The Supreme Court concluded that this was an appropriate case in which to exercise original jurisdiction and entertain the tribes' petition because: (1) the petition implicated this section; (2) tribal water rights are of statewide importance; (3) the decisive issue was purely legal or constitutional; and (4) the normal litigation process was inadequate because in the time that it might take for the case to proceed through the courts, any number of water use permits could be issued and water appropriated unlawfully pursuant to those permits. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes v. Clinch, 1999 MT 342, 297 M 448, 992 P2d 244, 56 St. Rep. 1356 (1999). See also Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984), and Stuart v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 247 M 433, 807 P2d 710, 48 St. Rep. 238 (1991).

Rebuttable Presumption of Abandonment Not Violative of Constitutional Recognition of Existing Water Rights: After hearing, the Water Court determined that three water rights held by appellants Pitsch had been abandoned because of nonuse over approximately 40 years. The Supreme Court held that the Water Court did not err in finding an abandonment based upon the holding in 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 204 M 426, 666 P2d 215 (1983). The rebuttable presumption of abandonment established in that case is constitutional. The Supreme Court has previously recognized that water rights existing at the time of adoption of the constitution have not been granted indefeasible status and are subject to the sovereign powers of the state. In re Adjudication of Musselshell River Rights, 255 M 43, 840 P2d 577, 49 St. Rep. 866 (1992).

No Duty for State to Warn of Hazards on Rivers: Drugge brought an action against the state on behalf of the estate of a relative who died in a boating accident. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the suit, ruling that the constitutional vesting to the state of ownership of the waters within the state boundaries did not create a duty based on liability or other tort law for the state to warn of hazards on rivers. Drugge v. St., 254 M 292, 837 P2d 405, 49 St. Rep. 798 (1992).

Post-1973 Evidence Unpersuasive as to Adjudication of Existing Water Right: The purpose of statewide water rights adjudication is to adjudicate those rights as they existed on July 1, 1973, the effective date of the Montana Water Use Act. Therefore, the Water Court did not err in refusing to consider evidence pertaining to a water right claimant's actions taken after 1973 as showing a lack of intent to abandon the water right. In re Adjudication of Clark Fork River Drainage, 254 M 11, 833 P2d 1120, 49 St. Rep. 591 (1992).

Duty to File Water Rights — Due Process Satisfied: The objective of the Legislature in enacting 85-2-226 was to meet the mandate of this section to establish a system of centralized records for the administration of water rights. Before water rights could be adjudicated statewide, it was essential that existing rights be firmly established. Section 85-2-226 provides a reasonable means of compelling comprehensive participation, extinguishing duplicative and exaggerated rights, and ridding local records of stale, unused water claims. The filing duty was not burdensome, unreasonable, or unrelated to the legitimate and proper legislative objective. Procedural due process considerations were sufficiently addressed through: (1) ample published and personal notice over a 4-year period; (2) an expanded opportunity to file a claim through an extension of the filing deadline; (3) an adequate opportunity for each claimant to show that he did not intend to abandon or forfeit water rights; and (4) an opportunity for all late claimants to request an evidentiary hearing with the Water Court to determine whether the deadline had in fact been missed. In re Adjudication of Existing Yellowstone River Water Rights, 253 M 167, 832 P2d 1210, 49 St. Rep. 413 (1992).

No Constitutional Protection for Pre-1973 Water Rights: Appellants who forfeited their water rights for failing to file a timely claim pursuant to 85-2-226 contended that subsection (1) of this section provided a guarantee of existing water rights and that while the Legislature may constitutionally affirm and protect existing water rights, those rights may not be statutorily forfeited or extinguished. The Supreme Court held that that subsection does not establish immunity from sovereign powers for pre-1973 water rights. Water rights, like other property rights, are protected against unreasonable state action but do not have indefeasible status. The Legislature may enact constitutionally sound regulations, including the requirement for property owners to take affirmative actions to maintain their water rights. In re Adjudication of Existing Yellowstone River Water Rights, 253 M 167, 832 P2d 1210, 49 St. Rep. 413 (1992).

Retroactivity and Validity of Change in Burden of Proof for Change of Water Appropriation: The fact that a water right existing at the time of adoption of the 1972 Montana Constitution is recognized by that constitution does not mean that if the owner of the right applies for a change in the right, the burden of proof must be placed on the objector. The objector had the burden in 1972, but the holder now has the burden under 85-2-402. The change in the burden of proof is not an impermissible retroactive application of the statute to the detriment of vested rights acquired under the 1972 Montana Constitution. Statutes that modify the procedure for exercising a vested right or for carrying out a duty do not constitute retroactive legislation. In re Application for Change of Appropriation of Water Rights for Royston, 249 M 425, 816 P2d 1054, 48 St. Rep. 747 (1991). See also In re Helena v. Community of Rimini, 2017 MT 145, 388 Mont. 1, 397 P.3d 1.

State's Right to a Pre-1973 Appropriation Use Right to Bean Lake for Recreation, Fish, and Wildlife: As part of the statewide water rights adjudication process, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks filed a claim for a pre-1973 "use" water right appropriation for recreation, fishing, and wildlife purposes in the waters of Bean Lake. The Department had stocked the lake, maintained the fishery resource, made studies of lake surface levels and fish population, and enforced rules relating to motor boats, and the public had made general use of the lake. The Department had been involved with the lake since 1933 and in 1964 obtained a warranty deed to 16.33 acres abutting the lake. The Department's use of the lake was beneficial within the meaning of the appropriation doctrine, but the Water Court correctly denied the claim because of a lack of diversion, intent, and notice. It is clear that under Montana law before 1973, no appropriation right was recognized for recreation, fish, and wildlife purposes, except through a Murphy right statute. The prevailing legal theory was that some form of diversion or capture of water was necessary for an appropriation, though some forms of nondiversionary water rights were given appropriation status. Since the law recognized no appropriation, the Department and public could not have intended one and adverse appropriators could not have had notice of a claim. In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228, 45 St. Rep. 1948 (1988), overruled in In re Adjudication of Existing Water Rights of Basin 41I, 2002 MT 216, 311 M 327, 55 P3d 396 (2002). See also Mont. Trout Unlimited v. Beaverhead Water Co., 2011 MT 151, 361 Mont. 77, 255 P.3d 179 (distinguishing In re Adjudication of Existing Water Rights of Basin 41I, 2002 MT 216, 311 Mont. 327, 55 P.3d 396).

Expression of Water Rights in Volume Rather Than Flow Rate — Not Unconstitutional: Even though almost every irrigation water right prior to the 1973 water use law was expressed in flow rate, the requirement of 85-2-234(6)(b) that the final decree state the amount of water, rate, and volume included in the right is not unconstitutional under Article IX, sec. 3(1) of the Montana Constitution. The amount, rate, and volume are at all times subject to the requirement of beneficial use. McDonald v. St., 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 576 (1986), rehearing denied, 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 1397 (1986).

Supreme Court Original Jurisdiction Over Declaratory Action Concerning Statewide Water Adjudication: The Supreme Court had power to determine an action for declaratory judgment involving the constitutionality of the requirement in 85-2-234 that final water decrees state "the amount of water, rate, and volume, included in the right". The issue affects all rights in the statewide adjudication process. Determination of the issue by the Supreme Court: (1) will provide guidance to the water court; (2) is in the interests of judicial economy; and (3) would serve the public policy of the state by expediting the determination of existing water rights. McDonald v. St., 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 576 (1986), rehearing denied, 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 1397 (1986).

State Water Court — Jurisdiction to Adjudicate Indian Reserved Water Rights: In an original proceeding to determine jurisdiction of the Water Court over Indian tribes and water flowing through state reservations, the Supreme Court held that this article of the Montana Constitution does not bar state jurisdiction to adjudicate Indian reserved water rights. With the 1952 McCarran amendment, the U.S. Congress diminished the scope of absolute federal jurisdiction by allowing state courts concurrent jurisdiction to adjudicate federal water rights. In Colo. River Water Conserv. District v. U.S., 424 US 800 (1976), the U.S. Supreme Court held that the McCarran amendment applied to Indian water rights. The state legislature's enactment of the Water Use Act (Title 85, ch. 2) pursuant to Art. IX, sec. 3, Mont. Const., constitutes a valid and binding consent of the people of Montana to Congress' grant of state jurisdiction over Indian reserved water rights. State ex rel. Greely v. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes, 219 M 76, 712 P2d 754, 42 St. Rep. 1856 (1985).

No Implied Severance of Water From School Trust Lands: Neither 77-6-115, nor the principles of the Water Use Act set forth in 85-2-101, nor the prior appropriation doctrine gives rise to an implied severance of water from land in the school trust land leases or estops the state from claiming title to the water rights on school trust land. Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Public Right to Use Beaverhead River for Recreational Purposes: Following the decision in Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984), the Supreme Court held that: (1) the Beaverhead River is navigable for recreational purposes and the public has a right to use its bed and banks up to the ordinary high-water mark with limited right to portage across private property in order to bypass barriers in the water; (2) determination of navigability for title is not necessary; (3) the public does not have the right to trespass over private property in order to reach the state-owned waters; and (4) plaintiff's action did not constitute inverse condemnation because public use of waters, rather than title, was determined. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

Determination of Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Standing of Coalition of Citizens: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether the Montana Coalition for Stream Access, Inc., had standing to bring suit was immaterial because the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks were also plaintiffs. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Determining Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Indispensable Parties: Stream access coalition, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation), and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks sued landowner along the Dearborn River, seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river. The District Court did not err for failure to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims for failure to join indispensable parties. When litigation seeks vindication of a public right, those who may be adversely affected by a decision do not thereby become indispensable parties. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Federal Test — Dearborn River Navigable: Federal law controlled the issue of whether the Dearborn River was, at the time Montana became a state, navigable for the purpose of determining title to its bed. Under federal law, rivers are navigable in law if they are navigable in fact, and they are navigable in fact if they were used or capable of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce over which trade and travel were or could be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on the water at the time of the state's admission to the Union. Navigability in fact can be determined by using the log-floating test. That test was satisfied by evidence that in 1887, 2 years before Montana became a state, the Dearborn was used to float about 100,000 railroad ties and that in 1888 or 1889, one or two log drives a year were floated down the river, one of them containing 700,000 board feet. Title to the riverbed was thus in the federal government when Montana became a state in 1889 and was transferred to the State upon its admission to the Union. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Summary Judgment — Dearborn River: The District Court properly granted the coalition for stream access and two state departments summary judgment on the issue of navigability of the Dearborn River in 1889 for title purposes. The affidavits and depositions of plaintiffs' two competent historians were admissible because the historians were qualified experts who provided evidence of the history of the river, their affidavits and depositions disclosed circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and the facts and data they relied on were of a type reasonably relied on by experts in their field; the facts and data did not themselves have to be admissible. The affidavits of defendant landowner's witnesses were worthless, were not admissible, and did not create any genuine issue of material fact concerning the navigability of the river at the time Montana became a state in 1889. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use of Dearborn River — No Inverse Condemnation: Landowner along Dearborn River was sued by parties seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river for recreational uses. Landowner counterclaimed for inverse condemnation, basing the counterclaim on his claim to ownership of the riverbed. The Supreme Court held that the question of title to the bed was irrelevant to determining navigability for use by the public; that landowner had no claim to the waters; that since there was no claim to the waters, nothing was taken and thus there was no ground for an inverse condemnation claim; and that, consequently, the District Court did not err in dismissing the counterclaim. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Public Recreational Use Rights on Dearborn River — Limits: Navigability for public use is governed by state law and is separate from the question of navigability under federal law for title purposes. The question is whether waters owned by the State under Art. IX, sec. 3(3), Mont. Const., are susceptible to recreational use by the public. The capability of use of the waters for recreational purposes determines the availability of the waters for recreational use by the public. Whether or not a private party owns the bed beneath the waters is irrelevant. The constitution and the Public Trust Doctrine bar a private party from interfering with the public's right to use of the surface of the waters owned by the State, and any surface waters that are capable of recreational use may be so used by the public without regard to streambed ownership or navigability for nonrecreational purposes. The public's recreational use right extends to the point of the high-water marks. The public does not have the right to cross over private property to reach waters upon which they have a recreational use right, though they may portage around barriers in the water in the least intrusive way possible, avoiding damage to any private property holder's rights. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Recreation on Dearborn River — Ex Post Facto, Contract Clause, and Irrevocable Privileged Considerations: The Supreme Court held that the State, not the landowner along the Dearborn River, held title to the bed of the river under the federal test of navigability (at the time Montana became a state) for purposes of determining title to the riverbed. The court also held that landowner had no right to exclude the public from recreational use of the waters of the Dearborn. Because of these holdings, landowner's questions relating to ex post facto laws, violation of the contract clause of the constitution, and irrevocable rights and privileges were not germane to the case. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Federal Commerce Clause Navigability Immaterial: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether Montana has adopted the log-floating test of commercial navigability and whether the Dearborn is navigable under the federal commercial use test were immaterial because the question was one of recreational use or navigability, not commercial navigability. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Title to and Public Use of Dearborn River — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Found: Landowner along the Dearborn River claimed the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over action for determination of the public's right to use the river, basing his claim on the presumption that he held title to the riverbed and that the State had no power to strip him of that title under the guise of determining navigability of the waters over the riverbed. The claim lacked merit because the State holds title to the riverbed and the water flowing over it, so that there was no question of the District Court's subject matter jurisdiction. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Forty Years of Nonuse as Raising Rebuttable Presumption of Intent to Abandon: Where the plaintiff and defendant became involved in litigation to establish their respective priorities to water appropriated from Big Coulee Creek and the evidence showed that neither had used previously appropriated water for a period of at least 40 years, the District Court did not err in holding that under section 89-802, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), the appropriation rights of both parties had been abandoned for lack of use of the water. While abandonment of a water right is a question of fact, nonuse for a period of at least 40 years raises, in effect, a rebuttable presumption of abandonment. Failure to use the water was not excused and the presumption not rebutted by a claim that the predecessors of the parties could not afford to use the water by irrigating their land, as economics could excuse nearly every otherwise abandoned water right. 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 204 M 426, 666 P2d 215, 40 St. Rep. 981 (1983), followed in In re Adjudication of Clark Fork River Drainage, 254 M 11, 833 P2d 1120, 49 St. Rep. 591 (1992), in which nonuse for 23-plus years was sufficient to constitute a presumption of abandonment despite the fact that the water right was carried as an asset on the county's books during the period of nonuse. See also Heavirland v. St., 2013 MT 313, 372 Mont. 300, 311 P.3d 813, in which the Supreme Court concluded that the 79 Ranch abandonment analysis applies retroactively.

Statute Requiring State Approval of Sale or Severance of Water Right — Rights Perfected Prior to Statute: Section 85-2-403, pertaining to surface and groundwater, provides that prior approval of the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation must be obtained before an appropriator may sell or sever an appropriation right. Application of that section to water rights perfected prior to its effective date does not violate this section of the Montana Constitution. The law has not changed, and the Department has simply been given a review function to determine an issue that could previously be determined only by a District Court. Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 90, 642 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 460 (1982), modifying on rehearing Castillo v. Kunnemann, 38 St. Rep. 1618 (1981) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports or Pacific 2d Reporter).

Use of Water — Public Use — Eminent Domain: Title 69, ch. 4, part 4, allows a landowner to cause a utility to relocate an overhead utility line for the purpose of installing an improved irrigation system. The use of water in the irrigation of farmland is a public use for which the right of eminent domain will lie. McTaggart v. Mont. Power Co., 184 M 329, 602 P2d 992 (1979).

Preservation of Existing Rights — Effect of 1972 Constitution: Plaintiff who had filed petition for appropriation before repeal of the former water law had an existing right in the priority of his application, which was preserved by subsection (1) of this section and by section 6(2) of the Transition Schedule of the 1972 Constitution. Gen. Agriculture Corp. v. Moore, 166 M 510, 534 P2d 859 (1975).

Self-Executing Provisions: All of this section, except subsection (4), is self-executing, and plaintiff was permitted to proceed with an action to adjudicate rights to appropriate surplus waters from an adjudicated stream which had been commenced prior to the repeal of statutory provisions providing for such an action. Gen. Agriculture Corp. v. Moore, 166 M 510, 534 P2d 859 (1975).

Protection of Rights: Mandamus to compel fish pond licensee, in compliance with later statute, to construct fish ladder on diversion dam installed 7 years before with approval of Commission was denied on theory that individuals who have put water to beneficial use should not have their rights arbitrarily diluted under claim of sovereign right. Paradise Rainbow v. Fish & Game Comm'n, 148 M 412, 421 P2d 717 (1966).

Rights-of-Way of Necessity: For example of implied reservations or implied grants of easement by necessity see: Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), which overruled Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957); Violet v. Martin, 62 M 335, 205 P 221 (1922); and Herrin v. Sieben, 46 M 226, 127 P 323 (1912).

Public Use — Ranch Irrigation: Impounding of water for the irrigation of a ranch was a public use and a lawful undertaking. Farmers Union Oil Co. v. Anderson, 129 M 580, 291 P2d 604 (1955); Richland County v. Anderson, 129 M 559, 291 P2d 267 (1955).

Impounding of Water a Lawful Business: Article III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., provided that the appropriation and use of waters, as well as the sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting and storing the same, shall be held to be a public use. The impounding of water in a reservoir for the purpose of irrigation, etc., was held to be a lawful business. Fed. Land Bank v. Morris, 112 M 445, 116 P2d 1007 (1941).

Sale or Rental: An appropriation of water may be made for purposes of sale or rental. Sherlock v. Greaves, 106 M 206, 76 P2d 87 (1938).

Prior Right Not to Be Impaired: Under Art. III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., the use of water in streams is a public use, and every citizen is entitled to divert and use it so long as he does not infringe upon the rights of others who have acquired a prior right by appropriation. State ex rel. Reeder v. District Court, 100 M 376, 47 P2d 653 (1935).

Legislative Power: While the effect of the provisions of Art. III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., was to foreclose inquiry into the subject by Legislature and the judiciary, the questions whether the power of eminent domain is put in motion for any particular purpose and whether the exigencies of the occasion and the public welfare require its exercise rest entirely with the Legislature. St. v. Aitchison, 96 M 335, 30 P2d 805 (1934).

Construction: Article III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., declaring that the use of sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting and storing water shall be a public one, should receive a broad construction to the end that floodwaters which would otherwise go to waste may be conserved for the purpose of making arid lands productive. Donich v. Johnson, 77 M 229, 250 P 963 (1926).

Beneficial Use Required — When Right Ceases: The use of water flowing in streams is a public use. The use must be beneficial, and when the appropriator or his successor ceases to use the water for such purpose, the right ceases. Conrow v. Huffine, 48 M 437, 138 P 1094 (1914).

Appropriator Need Not Own Land: The appropriator of water need not be an owner of or a person in the possession of land in order to make a valid appropriation for irrigation purposes. The use of water is a public use, and a public service corporation can appropriate water independently of present or future customers. Otherwise, the improvement of arid lands in localities when the undertaking by individuals would be too difficult would never take place. Bailey v. Tintinger, 45 M 154, 122 P 575 (1912).

Use of Appropriated Water Made a Public Use: A person may divert stream waters if he does not infringe upon the rights of others and if he restores the water to the stream after the cessation of the necessity. Featherman v. Hennessy, 42 M 535, 113 P 751 (1911); Bullerdick v. Hermsmeyer, 32 M 541, 81 P 334 (1905).

Acquisition of Prior Right by Eminent Domain: A beneficial use of the water flowing in the streams of the state is a public use, but it may nevertheless be appropriated to a more necessary public use, an example of which is the right of a city to acquire a water supply by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, even though it may have already been appropriated to some other public use. Carlson v. Helena, 39 M 82, 102 P 39 (1909).

Right to Appropriate May Be Acquired by Condemnation: Since the use of water is declared by the Constitution to be a public use, the right to appropriate water on the land of another may be acquired by condemnation proceedings. Prentice v. McKay, 38 M 114, 98 P 1081 (1909).

Section Self-Executing: The language of Art. III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., in the light of our history and natural conditions, in a region where the conservation and use of its waters are all-important to its development and progress, was a mandate from the sovereign people to the courts. The words "sale" and "rental" are especially significant. Article III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., was self-executing and should receive a broad construction. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Public Use — Flooding Land for Dam: The taking of land for the purpose of flooding it, rendered necessary by the construction of a dam for generating electric power to be sold to industrial enterprises and the general public and utilized for pumping water upon arid lands, is for such a public use as will support the right to acquire the land by condemnation. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 35 M 108, 88 P 773 (1907).

Public Use — Farm Irrigation: The use of water to irrigate a farm under the water-right law is a public use. Helena v. Rogan, 26 M 452, 68 P 798 (1902).

Restoration After Cessation: Under Art. III, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., the use of appropriated water was made a public use. Smith v. Denniff, 24 M 20, 60 P 398 (1900), distinguished in Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Limitation on Right to Appropriate: While any person is permitted to appropriate water for useful purpose, it must be used with some regard for the rights of the public. Fitzpatrick v. Montgomery, 20 M 181, 50 P 416 (1897). See Schodde v. Twin Falls Water Co., 224 US 107, 56 L Ed 686, 32 S Ct 470 (1912).

"Other Beneficial Use" Defined: The phrase "other beneficial use" includes other uses than such as are kindred to rental, sale, or distribution. It includes in the term "public use" the use of water for the purpose of irrigating a particular tract of agricultural land or working a particular mine, as well as the use of water for irrigating a number of tracts of land or working a number of mines owned by different persons. Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 19 M 462, 48 P 757 (1897). See E. Oreg. Land Co. v. Willow River Land & Irrigation Co., 204 F 516 (9th Cir. 1913).

Access to Rivers and Streams Via County Road Right-of-Way and Bridges: Given that the public has the right to use public highways in any manner and for any purpose consistent with or reasonably incidental to public travel, this right includes the use of public rights-of-way created by county roads to gain access to rivers and streams. Using a county road right-of-way as an access point to a river or stream right-of-way is consistent with and reasonably incidental to the public's right to travel on county roads. Further, a bridge and its abutments, as part of a public highway, offer the same access to rivers and streams for recreational use as the highway to which they are attached. However, the public's right of access is not unlimited and is subject to the following limitations: (1) the recreating public must stay within the county road and bridge right-of-way, which is assumed to be 60 feet unless otherwise stated by petition or dedication; (2) access may be limited by the reasonable exercise of a governing body's police power to control the use of roads for purposes such as safety and parking; and (3) use of a public highway may be limited by the manner in which it was created, such as a road created by prescriptive easement, which is limited both in size and usage to the original use during the prescriptive period and may include access for hunting, fishing, and recreation. 48 A.G. New Section: New section proposed by Ch. 499, L. 1975, adopted at the general election of November 2, 1976, effective July 1, 1977.

1999 Coal Producer's License Tax Violative of Constitutional Coal Severance Tax Provisions: By simple majority vote, the 1999 Legislature passed House Bill No. 260, which created a license tax on the production of coal and allocated revenue from the tax to various state programs. Several legislators challenged the validity of the new tax, contending that by creating a license tax on the same taxable event for which the state coal severance tax is imposed and then providing a credit against the severance tax in an amount slightly greater than the amount of the license tax, the Legislature simply diverted what in substance and character are coal severance taxes to purposes other than the coal tax trust fund, in violation of this section. The Supreme Court agreed, noting that the only difference between the coal severance tax and the coal producer's license tax was the purpose for which each was allocated. A tax on the production of natural resources is characterized by the nature of the activity upon which the tax is imposed, and the effect of a legislative assessment is more important than its label in determining the character of the tax. Legislative imposition of a tax can become unlawful when done to accomplish an unlawful end, which was the case in this instance because the coal producer's license tax diverted production-based coal severance taxes for an unconstitutional purpose. Although the Legislature has the authority to determine the percentage of the coal severance tax, in this case, the Legislature simply gave a different name to the same tax and thereby diverted revenue to causes other than the coal tax trust fund. A coal severance tax by any other name is just as dedicated. By diverting and allocating coal severance tax revenue in a manner contrary to the requirement in this section and by doing so without the required three-fourths vote of each house of the Legislature, House Bill No. 260 violated the constitution; thus, the state was enjoined from enforcing House Bill No. 260. Tax Inapplicable to Tribally Owned Coal: State taxation of coal owned by the Crow Tribe is an invalid interference with tribal autonomy and economic development even though the incidence of the tax falls on the non-Indian mineral developer. Amount of Funding Indefinite — Certainty Upon Sale of Bonds: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The plaintiff contended that H.B. 846, L. 1981, whereby the Legislature authorized issuance of up to $10 million in coal severance tax bonds for the state's share of construction costs of Tongue River Dam rehabilitation, violated Art. VIII, sec. 14, and Art. IX, sec. 5, Mont. Const., in that the amount of money necessary to finance the project was not definite or certain. The court found that at the time of the bill's passage, it was impossible for the Legislature to determine the exact cost. The authorization is contingent on legislative approval of a detailed project plan. Sections 17-5-709 and 17-5-710 place limits on the bonds that may be issued. The court found that no legislative assembly can be expected to predict the interest rate which will meet the market for the issuance of state bonds. The court found that when the bonds are issued and sold, the interest rate to be paid by the state will become certain. The amounts necessary to service and repay the indebtedness will be definite. The court relied on State ex rel. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Examiners, 74 M 1, 238 P 316 (1925), which held "that is certain which can be made certain" to uphold the authorization for the project. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Bonded Debt — Not Invalid as Continuing Appropriation: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. The bonds would be financed by coal severance taxes to provide proceeds for development of state water resources. Plaintiff contended that this was an invalid "continuing appropriation". Plaintiff contended that the 48th Legislature by enacting the program could not constitutionally bind future Legislatures to "appropriate" the coal tax money necessary to service the bonds; that the principal of the coal severance tax trust funds had been invaded for years; and that each bond issue requires a separate appropriation of coal severance tax revenues by a three-fourths vote of each house of the Legislature. The Supreme Court harmonized the various constitutional provisions involved. The court held that the Legislature can authorize long-term borrowing by issuing and selling bonds and can provide for the servicing for such indebtedness by repayment or refunding. The court found nothing making the coal severance tax trust fund immune from use as a source of funding for long-term state bonds. When the Legislature validly acts to establish a debt, that indebtedness becomes a state obligation extending over the life of the indebtedness, and every succeeding legislative assembly has an unavoidable duty to provide for it in the manner required by the authorizing law. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984).

Coal Severance Tax — Nondiscriminatory — Not Burden on Commerce: Montana coal producers and out-of-state utility customers brought suit challenging the constitutionality of Montana's severance tax on coal mined in the State. The U.S. Supreme Court held that Montana may constitutionally raise general revenue by imposing a severance tax on coal mined in the State. The entire value of the coal before transportation originates in the State, and mining the coal depletes the resource base and wealth of the State, thereby diminishing a future source of taxes and economic activity. The severance tax was found not to discriminate against interstate commerce under the four-part test set forth in Complete Auto Transit v. Brady, 430 US 274 (1977). The court held when, as here, a general revenue tax does not discriminate against interstate commerce and is apportioned to activities occurring within the State, the State is free to pursue its own fiscal policies, unembarrassed by the Constitution, if by the practical operation of a tax the State has exerted its power in relation to opportunities which it has given, to protection which it has afforded, and to benefits which it has conferred by fact of being an orderly civilized society. Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Mont., 453 US 609, 69 L Ed 2d 884, 101 S Ct 2946 (1981).

Three-Fourths Vote Required to Appropriate Severance Tax Trust Fund Income: Income deposited in the coal severance tax permanent fund under 17-5-704 becomes part of the principal of the trust. As such, the Legislature may not appropriate by a simple majority the income and interest earned on the trust fund since July 1, 1983; rather, a three-fourths vote of each house is required. 42 A.G. DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Complaint of School Use of Indian Mascots — Montana Commission for Human Rights Proper Forum for Claim of Unlawful Discrimination: Dupuis brought a discrimination claim against a reservation school district for using mascots allegedly degrading to Indian students. Without ruling on whether the use of the mascots was degrading, the Supreme Court held that Dupuis's remedy for a human dignity and racial discrimination case was to bring a claim before the Montana Commission for Human Rights before bringing an action in District Court. Failure to exhaust administrative remedies precluded the Supreme Court's consideration of the discrimination claims. Dupuis v. Ronan School District No. 30, 2006 MT 3, 330 M 232, 128 P3d 1010 (2006).

Challenge to State Education Funding Considered Justiciable Question: The District Court held that the state system of funding public education was unconstitutional. On appeal, the state contended that the issue was nonjusticiable under the political question doctrine in Baker v. Carr, 369 US 186 (1962). The Supreme Court recognized that nonself-executing constitutional clauses addressed to the Legislature are nonjusticiable political questions. Because this section constitutes a directive to the Legislature, that section initially presents a nonself-executing, nonjusticiable political question. However, once the Legislature executes a provision that implicates individual constitutional rights, under City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 US 507 (1997), courts can determine whether the enactment fulfilled the Legislature's constitutional responsibility. Here, once the Legislature addressed the threshold political issue by creating a basic system of free public schools, the Supreme Court found it not only justiciable but incumbent upon the court to ensure that the education system met the constitutional guarantee of the individual right to a quality education. Columbia Falls Elementary School District No. 6 v. St., 2005 MT 69, 326 M 304, 109 P3d 257 (2005).

Failure of Legislature to Define Quality Education — Inability of Court to Determine That Education System Adequately Funded: The District Court held that the state system of funding public education was unconstitutional under subsection (3) of this section but did not violate the equal protection clause in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the Legislature has not defined what "quality" means, it was not possible to conclude that the current funding system was designed to provide a quality education. Although deferring to the Legislature to provide a definition of a quality education, given the unchallenged findings of the District Court regarding subsection (3) of this section, the Supreme Court nevertheless concluded that whatever definition the Legislature devises, the current system was not sufficiently grounded in principles of quality to be considered constitutional. Because the unconstitutionality of the present funding system was affirmed, the Supreme Court held that the District Court need not have addressed the equal protection issue, so the District Court was directed to vacate its conclusion that the present system did not violate equal protection. Columbia Falls Elementary School District No. 6 v. St., 2005 MT 69, 326 M 304, 109 P3d 257 (2005). In Stroebe v. St., 2006 MT 19, 331 M 23, 127 P3d 1051 (2006), plaintiffs also challenged the constitutionality of Montana's system of funding public schools. The District Court granted the state's motion for summary dismissal on grounds that the equitable funding challenge was not currently justiciable. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that plaintiffs' issues had been previously addressed in Columbia Falls, id., and that the circumstances under which plaintiffs brought the present case had sufficiently changed under Columbia Falls, so that rendering another decision while the funding system was undergoing legislative reform would not only interfere with the Columbia Falls decision but would decide a question that was essentially moot. The equitable funding challenge was therefore not currently justiciable, and the appeal was dismissed.

Failure to Follow Procedural Requirements of Individuals With Disabilities Education Act Held Not to Deny Free Appropriate Public Education — Independent Cause of Action for Misdiagnosis and Misplacement Dismissed as Barred by Res Judicata: Brian Parini was diagnosed with a learning disability and was placed in special education pursuant to the requirements of the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), 20 U.S.C. 1400, et seq. Subsequently, Brian's mother filed a petition with the Office of Public Instruction (OPI), alleging that Brian's condition had not been subjected to a 3-year reevaluation as required by IDEA and that Brian was therefore denied his right under IDEA to a free appropriate public education (FAPE). OPI found that while IDEA may not have been complied with as to certain procedural requirements, Brian was not denied a FAPE. Brian then filed a complaint with the District Court in which he alleged that OPI had erred and also asserted an independent cause of action for damages, claiming that school employees had negligently misdiagnosed and misplaced him, denying him a FAPE. Relying extensively upon federal case law interpreting and applying IDEA, the Supreme Court held that the absence of a reevaluation did not deny Brian an educational opportunity because there was no causal linkage between the absence of the reevaluation and the educational opportunity afforded to Brian. The Supreme Court also concluded, in reliance upon its opinion in B.M. v. St., 200 M 58, 649 P2d 425 (1982), and this section, that Brian was entitled to bring an independent tort action for negligent misdiagnosis and misplacement. However, the Supreme Court held that because a nearly identical claim had been brought before OPI and the District Court and decided against Brian, his independent tort action was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Parini v. Missoula County High School District No. 1, 284 M 14, 944 P2d 199, 54 St. Rep. 711 (1997).

Private School Student Not Entitled to Participate in Public School Extracurricular Events: The Kapteins sought an order requiring the Conrad School District to allow their daughter, a private school student, to play on the public school basketball team. The Supreme Court stated that participation in extracurricular activities is not a fundamental right but is subject to constitutional protection and would be subject to a middle-tier analysis of the rights infringed versus the governmental interest served by the infringement. The Supreme Court held that in the present case, it was unable to conclude that a private student's interest in participating in extracurricular activities was more important than the school district's policy decision that, in order to effectively integrate academics and extracurricular activities, the district needed to restrict participation to those students enrolled in the public school system. Kaptein v. Conrad School District, 281 M 152, 931 P2d 1311, 54 St. Rep. 106 (1997).

High School Association Enforcement of Sports Eligibility Rules — Learning Disabled Student Lacking Individualized Education Program — Injunction Improper: The Montana High School

Association (MHSA) ruled that J.M., an alleged learning disabled student, was ineligible for participation in interscholastic sports activities during his senior year because he had already participated in four seasons of sports. The District Court, relying on T.H. v. Mont. High School Ass'n, CV-92-150-BLG-JFB (D.C. Mont. Sept. 24, 1992), enjoined MHSA from enforcing the four-season rule because J.M. had a federally protected right under the federal Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), 20 U.S.C. 1400, et seq. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that it was improper to elevate J.M.'s privilege of participation in interscholastic sports to the level of a federally protected right under IDEA and to afford him individualized inquiry when J.M. had not followed the statutorily and administratively mandated mechanism for identification and qualification under IDEA and for developing a formal, written individualized education program. Because MHSA was not a state or local education agency, as defined in IDEA, MHSA had no obligation to identify or evaluate J.M.'s special education needs. The District Court's reliance on T.H. was in error, and the injunction was inappropriate absent evidence that J.M. was actually qualified for IDEA benefits. J.M. v. Mont. High School Ass'n, 265 M 230, 875 P2d 1026, 51 St. Rep. 401 (1994), followed in M.H. v. Mont. High School Ass'n, 280 M 123, 929 P2d 239, 53 St. Rep. 1328 (1996).

Factoring of "874" Money Into Equalization Formula: A state may factor Pub. L. No. 81-874 revenue into its school finance equalization system only if the system meets the federal definition of an equalized program, subject to the determination of the Secretary of Education. School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989).

Public School Funding System Unconstitutional: The guarantee of equality of educational opportunity applies to each person in the state and is binding on all branches of government, whether at the state, local, or school district level. As a result of the failure to adequately fund the foundation program, thereby forcing an excessive reliance on permissive levies, the state failed to provide a system of quality public education granting to each student the equality of educational opportunity guaranteed under the Montana Constitution. Spending disparities among Montana school districts further resulted in a denial of equality of educational opportunity. Therefore, the 1985-86 system of funding public elementary and secondary schools was a violation of this section. School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989).

Constitutionality of 2.0 Grade Average Rule — Extracurricular Activities Not Fundamental Right: In determining whether the District Court erred in holding that participation in extracurricular activities is not a fundamental right, the Supreme Court applied the middle-tier level of constitutional analysis recognized in Butte Community Union v. Lewis, 219 M 426, 712 P2d 1309, 43 St. Rep. 65 (1986), and concluded that the 2.0 rule did not violate the Montana Constitution because: (1) the right to extracurricular participation is not enumerated in the constitutional Declaration of Rights; and (2) government interests in developing the full educational potential in each person and providing a basic system of quality public education by enactment of the 2.0 rule outweigh a student's interest in participating in existing extracurricular activities. State ex rel. Bartmess v. Bd. of Trustees, 223 M 269, 726 P2d 801, 43 St. Rep. 1713 (1986), followed in Kaptein v. Conrad School District, 281 M 152, 931 P2d 1311, 54 St. Rep. 106 (1997), holding that a private school student has no right to participate in public school extracurricular activities.

Wrongful Placement of Special Education Child — Duty Owed by School District — Sovereign Immunity No Bar to Claim for Damages: The plaintiff, a minor child, was diagnosed as needing special education and was to be educated in a class with other "normal" children but was later removed to a class of retarded children and as a result regressed in development. The school district's action of placement of the child was subject to judicial review and was not barred from review by the doctrine of sovereign immunity merely because it was discretionary. The school authorities owed the child a duty of reasonable care in testing and placing her in an appropriate special education program, and the District Court therefore erred in dismissing the child's action for damages. B.M. v. St., 200 M 58, 649 P2d 425, 39 St. Rep. 1285 (1982), distinguished in Hayworth v. School District No. 19, 243 M 503, 795 P2d 470, 47 St. Rep. 1361 (1990). B.M. was followed in Parini v. Missoula County High School District No. 1, 284 M 14, 944 P2d 199, 54 St. Rep. 711 (1997).

Determination of Child's Condition and Needs — Necessary Evidence: Once the District Court found from the evidence that child A had not been making substantial progress as a participant in the mildly mentally retarded special education program and might be retrogressing and also found that the child was indeed severely emotionally disturbed, it was necessary that the child be placed in a special out-of-state school. The evidence supported no other choice, and substantial evidence supported the finding. In re the "A" Family, 184 M 145, 602 P2d 157 (1979).

School Funding Through Property Tax: Although the Legislature has traditionally provided for the cost of public instruction from oil and gas royalties, income taxes, or corporation taxes, it is not unconstitutional to provide for such costs through the levy of a statewide property tax. State ex rel. Woodahl v. Straub, 164 M 141, 520 P2d 776 (1974), certiorari denied, 419 US 845, 42 L Ed 2d 73, 95 S Ct 79 (1974).

Education Fees: A school district may not assess charges for any course or activity offered during the regular academic year as a part of normal school functions which are reasonably related to a recognized academic and educational goal of the school system. School district's waiver of constitutionally invalid fees for welfare recipients and other cases of economic hardship did not validate the fees. Granger v. School District, 159 M 516, 499 P2d 780 (1972).

Equal Protection — Extracurricular Activities of Married Students: The thorough system of education required by Art. XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., included extracurricular activities sponsored by the schools, and the right to engage in such activities is constitutionally protected. School district rule prohibiting extracurricular activities to married students denied them the equal protection of the laws with respect to the right granted by Art. XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., and enforcement of the rule would be restrained by preliminary injunction. Moran v. School District, 350 F. Supp. 1180 (D.C. Mont. 1972), distinguished in State ex rel. Bartmess v. Bd. of Trustees, 223 M 269, 726 P2d 801, 43 St. Rep. 1713 (1986).

Age of Entry: A reasonable interpretation of constitutional and statutory provisions specifying that school shall be open to children between the ages of 6 and 21 years, read again in connection with other provisions requiring a thorough education, is that a child must be allowed to enter the first grade sometime during his seventh year, after reaching his sixth birthday. Each school district has the power to admit children into the first grade who are not yet 6 years of age, and each school district may establish a "cutoff" date governing entry into the first grade. State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Levy Limitations Applicable: The fact that state tax imposed on foreign corporation's freight cars went into common school income and interest fund did not remove it from the constitutional limitation on levies for state purposes. St. v. N. Am. Car Corp., 118 M 183, 164 P2d 161 (1945).

Purpose: The primary purpose underlying provisions which charge the Legislature with maintaining a general, uniform, and thorough system of free public schools and providing sufficient funds, etc., is the promotion of the general intelligence of the people constituting the body politic and thereby to increase the usefulness and efficiency of the citizens upon which the government of society depends. State ex rel. Lien v. School District, 106 M 223, 76 P2d 330 (1938).

Intent: The clear intent of Art. XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., was that adequate facilities for the education of all children shall be furnished. Grant v. Michaels, 94 M 452, 23 P2d 266 (1933).

Rental of Buildings for Public Dances: The Legislature had power to clothe the high school board with authority to provide, to some extent, for the maintenance of the school by authorizing the board to rent school buildings to private persons for public dances. Young v. Bd. of Trustees, 90 M 576, 4 P2d 725 (1931).

"Education" Defined: "Education" in its broadest sense embraces mental, moral, and physical powers or faculties. McNair v. School District, 87 M 423, 288 P 188 (1930).

Mandate to Legislature: Article XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., was not exclusive so as to limit the legislative power to the establishment and maintenance of common schools and institutions only. The purpose was to insure a system of common schools, but nothing limits the power of the Legislature to provide for other schools. The section was not a limitation upon the legislative power, but is a mandate to the Legislature. Evers v. Hudson, 36 M 135, 92 P 462 (1907).

Classification of School Districts for Election of Trustees: Article XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., did not prohibit the enactment of a law classifying school districts for the purposes of the election of trustees according to population if the law provides for a reasonable classification and is reasonable and uniform in its operation and effect upon all districts within the same classification, although at the time of the passage of the act only a few districts would be included within the law. State ex rel. Bray v. Long, 21 M 26, 52 P 645 (1898), overruled on other grounds in Palatine Ins. Co. v. N. Pac. Ry. Co., 34 M 268, 85 P 1032 (1906).

Uniform Textbooks Not Required: While the Legislature has the power to establish a series of textbooks for use in the public schools, Art. XI, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., did not require the adoption of a uniform series of textbooks. Campana v. Calderhead, 17 M 548, 44 P 83 (1896).

Beds of Navigable Rivers Considered Public Trust Lands, Not School Trust Lands — Administration by Board of Land Commissioners: A question arose as to whether the beds of navigable Montana rivers are school trust lands or public trust lands. The District Court concluded that the riverbeds were public trust lands but then went on to hold that the riverbeds were school trust lands on the theory that the Board of Land Commissioners had authority to classify the riverbeds as school trust lands. The Supreme Court agreed that the beds of navigable rivers are public trust lands pursuant to Art. X, sec. 11, Mont. Const., but reversed the decision that the riverbeds are school trust lands. Unclaimed Shares and Dividends: When corporation was voluntarily dissolved, unclaimed shares and their pro rata share of unpaid dividends became abandoned property and subject to escheat to state 2 years after final distribution of assets. Barnes-King Dev. Co. v. Corette, 156 M 202, 478 P2d 868 (1970).

Escheated Estates — Alien Heirs: The provision of section providing for delivery to county general fund of all property of decedent's estate which would have vested in his nonresident alien next of kin but for other provisions of the statute was invalid as violating Art. XI, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., placing in public school fund all escheated estates and escheated interests in estates. In re Nielsen's Estate, 118 M 304, 165 P2d 792 (1945).

Part of Estate Which Escheats to State: Sections prohibiting inheritance by alien heirs whose country does not permit inheritance by residents of this state create an escheat. Article XI, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., required all escheated estates or distributive shares of escheated estates to go to the public school fund of the state, and the Legislature had no power to direct that such property go to either the county general fund or the general fund of the state. If all nonresident alien heirs of a decedent are disqualified from sharing in an escheated estate, the entire estate is taken. If only a part of the heirs are disqualified, only their interests are taken, since Art. XI, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., speaks of "estates, or distributive shares of estates". Bottomly v. Meagher County, 114 M 220, 133 P2d 770 (1943).

Limitation on Power to Dispose of School Land: The provisions of section 7 of ordinance No. 1, with relation to grants of land made by the United States; of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., providing the manner of disposal of such land; and of Art. XI, sec. 2 and 12, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that the school fund derived from the proceeds of such land shall be guaranteed against loss or diversion, were limitations upon the power of disposal of school land by the Legislature. Newton v. Weiler, 87 M 164, 286 P 133 (1930).

Capacity of State to Acquire Property: Article X, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., did not deal with the subject of the capacity of the state of acquire property. In re Beck's Estate, 44 M 561, 121 P 784 (1912).

Payment of Attorney Fees and Costs From Funds: Private organization that won suit seeking to have state barred from denying certain state aid money to high school district was, under the "common fund" doctrine, entitled to recover attorney fees and costs from the common fund, that is, from the state aid money ordered to be paid. Under the common fund doctrine, if a party, through active litigation, creates or increases a fund, others sharing in the fund must bear a portion of the litigation costs, including reasonable attorney fees. Investment of Fund Lawful: Article XI, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const., did not mean that the state may not invest the public school fund under regulations as may be prescribed by law. Assessments against lands acquired by the state under mortgages for loans made from public school fund were valid. Toole County Irrigation District v. St., 104 M 420, 67 P2d 989 (1937).

Inapplicable to Funds Raised by Levy — Payment on Special Assessment Delinquency: The provision of the Constitution that the public school fund shall forever remain inviolate refers to the permanent school fund and not to funds raised by tax levies. The contention that to hold school districts liable for penalties, interest, and costs on delinquency in payment of special improvement assessments would violate the constitutional guaranty was not sustained. School District v. Helena, 87 M 300, 287 P 164 (1930).

Proper Application of Profitability Method of Determining Fair Market Value of Hydroelectric Facility's Damages Owed to State for Past Use of State-Owned Riverbeds — Future Lease Terms Left to Board of Land Commissioners: After holding that the state was entitled to compensation for use of state-owned riverbeds by plaintiff hydroelectric utility, the District Court applied a profitability methodology to determine the productive value of the land in order to arrive at a fair market value for plaintiff's use of the riverbeds. Plaintiff contested the methodology, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The state uses productive value of the land in determining lease rates, and nothing in Montana law barred an award of damages based on plaintiff's profits, so income-based leasing was an appropriate method to calculate past damages in this case. Use of the Hydroelectric Resources Act (HRA), Title 77, ch. 4, part 2, was a proper mechanism to assess past damages, and the District Court's findings in support of the award were not clearly erroneous. The District Court also correctly left to the discretion of the Board of Land Commissioners the terms of any future lease with plaintiff and properly held that the Board was not bound by the same method used to calculate past damages in developing future lease terms. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, following State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 Mont. 46, 409 P.2d 808 (1966).

Following the Montana Supreme Court's decision, PPL appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana court's ruling in part, holding that the Montana court had not properly considered the rivers in question on a segment-by-segment basis and had not determined whether they were navigable in fact at the time of statehood. The United States Supreme Court remanded the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion. PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Repealed Statute Regarding Sale or Lease of School Trust Lands to School Districts — No Justiciable Controversy or Action Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Former 20-6-621(4) allowed the Board of Land Commissioners to sell, for appraised value, or to lease, for $1 a year, school trust lands to a school district. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation stipulated that the provision was unconstitutional because it made state lands available for less than full market value. The District Court agreed, noting that leasing school trust lands to some school districts would favor only some of the beneficiaries and not the school trust as a whole. The Legislature concurred and repealed the subsection in 1999. Plaintiff subsequently sued the Department, the Board, and the state, contending that the Department unlawfully determined that the provision was unconstitutional and failed to defend the constitutionality of the provision. The state moved to dismiss the complaint on grounds that no justiciable controversy existed and that the complaint alleged no cause of action upon which relief could be granted. The District Court granted summary judgment for the state, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Any determination that the Department exceeded its authority would have had no bearing on the existing rights or interests at issue, and a judgment granting the relief sought would not have effectively operated to resolve any issue in the case. Thus, there was no justiciable case or controversy, and the claim was properly dismissed. Advocates for Educ., Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2004 MT 230, 322 M 429, 97 P3d 553 (2004), following Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Billings, 2003 MT 332, 318 M 862, 80 P3d 1247 (2003).

Failure to Distinguish Between Commercially Valuable and Nonvaluable Timber as Firewood on State Lands Violative of Trust Duty of Undivided Loyalty: Pursuant to 77-5-211, the state discretionarily issued free permits for the gathering of dead, down, or inferior wood from school trust lands for use as firewood. The District Court concluded that 77-5-211 authorizes the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to act in violation of the school trust by allowing the Department to give away commercially valuable timber, in violation of its trust duty of undivided loyalty. The state argued on appeal that the District Court's conclusions were incorrect because the Department retained discretion to issue permits and because plaintiff failed to show that dead wood had commercial value in all instances. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Wild W. Motors, Inc. v. Lingle, 224 M 76, 728 P2d 412, 43 St. Rep. 2030 (1986), in considering the state's duty of undivided loyalty as trustee of school trust lands, noting that a trustee must act with the utmost good faith toward the beneficiary and may not act in the trustee's own interest or in the interest of a third party. In failing to distinguish between commercially valuable timber and timber that lacks commercial value, the statute allows the Department to issue permits to third parties without charging them for any commercially valuable wood that they collect, violating both the mandate that full market value be obtained for school trust lands and the state's trust duty of undivided loyalty. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Market Value of State Land Rights-of-Way Set by Statute at 1972 Levels — Unconstitutionality: The plain language of 77-1-130 requires that full market valuations of right-of-way acreage for historic deeds on state trust lands be based on the median values for the classifications of land at 1972 levels, leaving the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation no choice but to use those levels instead of current market value. The state argued that pursuant to 40 A.G. Op. 24 (1983), the figures in 77-1-130 are merely a minimum above which the Department may charge full market value. However, the statutory language is mandatory rather than discretionary and violates the provisions of the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act, which require the state to receive full market value for school trust lands, and thus is unconstitutional. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

State Land Cabin Site Renewal Policy Not Violative of Obligation to Obtain Full Market Value: Plaintiff contended that 77-1-208 is facially invalid because the use of a cabin site renewal policy that did not employ competitive bidding was calculated to keep cabin site rental rates below full market value. However, nothing in the plain language of 77-1-208 abrogates the mandate that full market value be obtained for school trust lands. Plaintiff failed to show that the statute violates the duty of undivided loyalty or that the preference accorded lessees on cabin site leases on state lands resulted in renewal rates below market value. The statute legislatively establishes a method by which full market value is obtained, which is allowed pursuant to Jerke v. Dept. of State Lands, 182 M 294, 597 P2d 49 (1979), but the language of 77-1-208 nevertheless requires that full market value be obtained, by whatever method is used, and therefore on its face does not violate the trust. Thus, the District Court correctly held that the renewal preference in 77-1-208 does not violate the school trust requirements of the Montana Constitution or The Enabling Act of 1889. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

State Land Cabin Site Rental Policy Violative of School Trust Obligation to Obtain Fair Market Value: The policy employed by the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation in renting cabin sites on state lands, in a manner that resulted in below-market rentals, violated the state's school trust obligations under the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act of 1889, even though 77-1-208 is facially valid because it requires that full market value be obtained. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966), and Jerke v. Dept. of State Lands, 182 M 294, 597 P2d 49 (1979).

Statute Allowing State Lands to Remain Idle While Lessees Determine Value of Improvements — Unconstitutionality: Under 77-6-305, the value of improvements placed on the leasehold by a former lessee is required to be paid by the new lessee before the new lease may be issued if the former lessee chose not to remove the improvements. The District Court found the provision constitutional even though it might result in less revenue because of delay caused by lease delays, concluding that the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation must have latitude to administer school trust lands. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that portion of 77-6-305 unconstitutional on its face. The state's discretion to administer the trust is broad, but not unlimited, and must conform to the requirements of the trust. The statute allows trust lands to idle indefinitely while former and new lessees determine the value of the improvements, which is inconsistent with the trust mandate that full market value be received for the lands. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Statute Allowing Uncompensated Time for Removing Improvements Violative of Full Benefit of Trust Lands and Trust Duty of Undivided Loyalty: Under 77-6-304, a former state land leaseholder was allowed up to 60 days to remove movable improvements without charge. The state contended that the statute does not violate any fiduciary duty, but merely allows the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation time to inventory improvements on state lands, with no quantifiable impact on the trust fund. Conceding that the policy could reduce potential profits to the trust, the District Court nevertheless found that: (1) nothing in the statute prevents the Department from charging former lessees for storage of improvements after termination of their leases; (2) the statute does not prevent a new lessee from moving onto trust land before the former lessee has removed the improvements; and (3) it was reasonably necessary for the Department to allow former lessees some extra time to remove improvements, especially in winter months when most agricultural leases expire. The Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that 77-6-304 plainly authorizes the Department to allow former lessees to remain free of charge on trust lands while removing improvements, denying the trust beneficiaries the full benefit of the trust lands and violating the duty of undivided loyalty by benefiting third parties to the detriment of the trust beneficiaries. The statute was declared unconstitutional on its face. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999). See also Lassen v. Ariz. Highway Dept., 385 US 458, 17 L Ed 2d 515, 87 S Ct 584 (1967).

Tax Credit for Donations to Sectarian Schools — United States Supreme Court Reversal of Montana Supreme Court — Free Exercise Clause of Federal Constitution Overrides No-Aid Provision of Montana Constitution: The Montana Supreme Court found that the portion of the tax credit program codified at 15-30-3111 constituted a violation of Art. X, sec. 6, Mont. Const., which prohibits the Legislature, counties, cities, towns, school districts, and public corporations from making any direct or indirect appropriation or payment from any public fund or money for any sectarian purpose or to aid any church, sect, or denomination. The court found that by reimbursing, dollar-for-dollar, the donation to a student scholarship organization that directly funded tuition scholarships at religiously affiliated schools, the Legislature impermissibly functioned as the entity providing aid to sectarian schools, and the provision was determined to be facially unconstitutional. Because SB 410 (Ch. 457, L. 2015), which enacted the tax credit program, contained a severability clause, the Montana Supreme Court concluded that 15-30-3111 must be severed from the remainder of SB 410. (Espinoza v. Dept. of Revenue, 2018 MT 306, 393 Mont. 446, 435 P.3d 603). On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana Supreme Court on the grounds that the Montana Supreme Court's application of the no-aid provision in Art. X, sec. 6, Mont. Const., discriminated against religious schools and families whose children attend or hope to attend them, in violation of the free exercise clause of the federal constitution. Espinoza v. Mont. Attendance Unit on Hutterite Colony Premises — Establishment — Closure — Finance: A school district board of trustees may establish a separate attendance unit on the premises of a Hutterite colony located in the district. Closure of an attendance unit on the premises of a Hutterite colony is a matter within the discretion of the board of trustees of the school district involved, and the trustees have no authority to make an agreement to the contrary. The colony may effectively close an attendance unit by failing to renew the lease agreement if no similar space is available for its continued operation. Operational costs of an attendance unit must be budgeted and financed in the manner provided by law. Any agreement between the school district and the colony for private financing would be unenforceable. 38 A.G. Op. 26 (1979).

Alternative Renewable Energy Source Grants to Religious Organizations: Alternative renewable energy source grants may not be awarded to any church or to any school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other literary or scientific institution controlled in whole or in part by any church, sect, or denomination. Other religious organizations may be awarded grants if a substantial portion of their functions are secular and grants will only be used for such functions. 37 A.G. Op. 165 (1978).

Use of School Facilities by Religious Groups — Rental: Religious groups may use public school property on an occasional and short-term basis upon securing the consent of the school district trustees. The trustees should charge a fair rental in order to preclude a "grant" of property under this section. The use may not interfere with the use of the school for school purposes. 36 A.G. Op. 65 (1976).

Entire Student Body of Hutterite Faith: An elementary school district composed entirely of property belonging to North Harlem Hutterite Colony would be eligible to receive public money for school purposes without violating any provision of 1972 Montana Constitution provided the school remains under the authority, control, and operation of the public school system by public school personnel and open to all persons eligible to attend this public school. 36 A.G. Attorney General's Opinions

Entire Student Body of Hutterite Faith: An elementary school district composed entirely of property belonging to North Harlem Hutterite Colony would be eligible to receive public money for school purposes without violating any provision of 1972 Montana Constitution provided the school remains under the authority, control, and operation of the public school system by public school personnel and open to all persons eligible to attend this public school. 36 A.G. Op. 5 (1975).

Section 8. School district trustees.

Convention Notes

New provision which guarantees control of schools to local boards. Deletes requirement in 1889 constitution that elections for school district officers must be separate from state and county elections.

Case Notes

Voluntary Membership in High School Athletic Association Not Unconstitutional Delegation of Trustee Authority: A Livingston high school student, after being informed by the Montana High School Association (MHSA) that he could not participate in basketball because of the MHSA's rule limiting student participation in MHSA events to eight consecutive semesters, filed an action alleging that the board of trustees' consent to be bound by the MHSA rules violated this section, which vests school board trustees with power to supervise and control schools in their district. The Supreme Court held that the MHSA is merely acting as a neutral arbiter to fill the breach caused by the nonexistence of legislative authority and that becoming a member of the MHSA is not an unconstitutional delegation of the district's authority because membership is voluntary. The court noted that although a district's decision to withdraw from membership in the MHSA would undoubtedly cause the district to have a difficult time in finding other schools against which to compete, membership remains voluntary, and by participating, each district is electing to make the rules of the MHSA its own. Grabow v. Mont. High School Ass'n, 2002 MT 242, 312 M 92, 59 P3d 14 (2002).

Spending Disparities Not Allowed: This section does not require that spending disparities between the school districts of the state be allowed to exist because the disparities cannot be described as the result of local control. School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989).

Resignation of Tenured Teacher — Formal Board Acceptance Not Required: A tenured teacher was charged with misdemeanor theft and pleaded guilty. The Board of Education of District No. 1 voted to authorize the Superintendent of Schools to request the teacher's immediate resignation and grant 30 days' severance pay. The same day the teacher signed a letter of immediate resignation. The guilty plea was later withdrawn, the theft case was dismissed, and the teacher sought to withdraw her resignation. Withdrawal was denied by the Board, County and State Superintendents of Schools, and the District Court. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the Board did not need to formally accept a resignation which it had already decided to request and that it was not a delegation of authority for the Board to make a decision and direct an employee to carry an offer to a teacher. The resignation was effective and the district's contractual obligation was satisfied upon the teacher's acceptance of the severance pay. Booth v. Argenbright, 225 M 272, 731 P2d 1318, 44 St. Rep. 227 (1987).

Power of School District Trustees Over Teachers: A tenured teacher was not offered a new contract because he cohabited with a female teacher, discussed abortion, and displayed fetuses in the classroom. The decision of the Board of Trustees not to rehire was upheld by the County Superintendent and the State Superintendent. The District Court overturned the decision, and an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court found that a Board of Trustees has wide discretion. The court said that Trustees have the power and duty to both employ a teacher and terminate him under the appropriate circumstances. In doing this, the rights of the teacher must also be kept in mind. The tenure of a teacher is clearly both a valuable and substantial right that cannot be taken away except for good cause. In addition, the conduct of a teacher, including a characterization of immorality, must be such as to directly affect the performance by the teacher of his duties as a teacher. Good cause was found in this instance. Yanzick v. School District, 196 M 375, 641 P2d 431, 39 St. Rep. 191 (1982).

Arbitration of Teacher Contract Nonrenewal: Nonrenewal of nontenured teacher's contract was not a "grievance" within a collective bargaining agreement with the school board and subject to arbitration provisions of the agreement when not allowed under former law regarding negotiations for teachers. Wibaux Educ. Ass'n v. Wibaux County High School, 175 M 331, 573 P2d 1162 (1978).

Teacher Dismissal Statutes — Control and Supervision: Article X, sec. 8, Mont. Const., does not grant control and supervision of the schools of each district solely to the boards of trustees, and statutes granting review powers over the dismissal of teachers under contract to County Superintendents of Schools were not unconstitutional. School District v. Hughes, 170 M 267, 552 P2d 328 (1976).

Negotiation of Master Agreement: The professional negotiations act for teachers does not require the board of trustees to reach a settlement but only requires a good faith effort, and the final decision for teachers' contracts must rest with the board. State ex rel. Billings Educ. Ass'n v. District Court, 166 M 1, 531 P2d 685 (1974).

Attorney General's Opinions

Acceptance of Canadian Students — Tuition — Waiver: A school district board of trustees may, in its discretion, accept as elementary and high school students Canadian residents who wish to attend school in Montana. The trustees are also authorized to exercise discretion in granting a waiver of tuition to these and all other out-of-district students. If the trustees choose to charge tuition, 20-5-305 (now repealed) must be referred to in setting the amount of tuition for elementary students and 20-5-312 (now repealed) for high school students. 42 A.G. Op. 103 (1988).

School Boards — Employment of Principals: A school district board of trustees may not delegate its duty to employ or dismiss principals and vice-principals to the school district superintendent. 37 A.G. Op. 133 (1978).

District School Board — Nonprofit Corporation: School board trustees have only those powers expressed or implied by law, and since the general powers and duties of school board trustees neither expressly nor impliedly give school trustees the authority to incorporate, a district school board may not incorporate under the Montana Nonprofit Corporation Act. 35 A.G. Op. 47 (1973).

Section 9. Boards of education.

Convention Notes

Revises 1889 constitution by creating one board (Board of Public Education) to supervise the public school system and a separate board (Board of Regents of Higher Education) to supervise the university system. The two boards together form one board (Board of Education) for considering mutual problems. Under 1889 constitution there is just one board to supervise the entire educational system. Each of the two proposed boards consists of 7 persons appointed by the governor (one less than in 1889 constitution). The governor and superintendent are ex officio, non-voting members (the attorney general is an ex officio member in 1889 constitution).

Open Public Meeting Laws Liberally Construed — University System Policy Committee Meetings Open to Public: Plaintiff media organizations sued the Commissioner of Higher Education, alleging that policy meetings between the Commissioner and other University System senior employees were subject to state open meeting laws. The District Court concluded that the meetings should be open to the public, and on appeal, the Supreme Court concurred. The Legislature created open meeting laws with the intent that deliberations of state agencies be conducted openly, and to that end, the open meeting laws are liberally construed. In the context of 2-3-203, public or governmental bodies means a group of individuals organized for a governmental or public purpose. Although the university policy committee was not formally created by a government entity to accomplish a specific function, the committee brought together public officials for an undeniably public purpose. The committee was not merely a staff meeting or factfinding body, nor was it an ad hoc group that came together to consider a specific matter or to gather facts on a particular issue. Rather, the group met to deliberate on matters of substance that were the public's business and thus was considered a public body within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const., whose meetings were required to be open to the public. The Commissioner argued that: (1) even if the committee was considered a public body, it did not hold meetings as contemplated in the open meeting laws; (2) because the committee's membership was not fixed, no number of members were required to attend to constitute a quorum; and (3) neither direct action nor votes were taken at committee meetings. The Supreme Court disagreed. A quorum of any body of an indefinite number consists of the members who attend a meeting. All that is required under 2-3-202 is that a quorum of the membership convene to conduct public business, not that the meeting produces some particular result or action or that a vote be taken. The constitution protects the public's right to observe the deliberations of public bodies, and the policy committee meetings were required to be open to the public. Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004).

Statutory Immunity Not Extended to Board of Regents: The Board of Regents of Higher Education is not a local governmental entity within the meaning of 2-9-111, and therefore no immunity from suit is extended to the Board of Regents by 2-9-111. Mitchell v. Univ. of Mont., 240 M 261, 783 P2d 1337, 46 St. Rep. 2109 (1989).

Clarification of Findings Regarding Statewide Accreditation Standards: The Supreme Court amended certain District Court findings and conclusions regarding statewide accreditation standards adopted by the Board of Public Education to clarify that: (1) the minimum standards do not fully define a quality education; (2) the Montana school accreditation standards are minimum standards upon which quality education must be built; and (3) the standards do not fully define either the constitutional rights of students or the constitutional responsibilities of the state for funding its public and elementary schools. School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989).

Teacher Dismissal Statutes — Control and Supervision: Article X, sec. 8, Mont. Const., does not grant control and supervision of the schools of each district solely to the boards of trustees, and statutes granting review powers over the dismissal of teachers under contract to County Superintendents of Schools were not unconstitutional. School District v. Hughes, 170 M 267, 552 P2d 328 (1976).

Balance of Powers — University Funding: This provision, when construed with Art. III, sec. 1, Art. V, sec. 1, and Art. VIII, sec. 12, Mont. Const., justifies legislative power to appropriate and exercise control over expenditures through itemization. However, appropriation certification over private money and appropriation conditions limiting college president salaries are unconstitutional infringements on the management authority of the Board of Regents. Bd. of Regents v. Judge, 168 M 433, 543 P2d 1323 (1975).

Jurisdiction and Authority of Board of Education: The authority of the State Board of Education is limited to long-range planning, coordination, and evaluation under this section. An act which designated the State Board of Education as the State Board of Vocational Education (now abolished) was unconstitutional as being violative of this section. Bd. of Public Education v. Judge, 167 M 261, 538 P2d 11 (1975).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Delegation of Powers: The Legislature in former sections restricted the State Board of Education in delegation of its powers, and this precluded college officials from contracting with teachers and instructors on behalf of the Board. Brown v. St. Bd. of Education, 142 M 547, 385 P2d 643 (1963).

Actions Ex Contractu Against Board: The State Board of Education could be sued for a breach of contract without the consent of the state. Meens v. St. Bd. of Education, 127 M 515, 267 P2d 981 (1954).

Governing Regulation With Force of Law: A regulation of the State Board of Education providing that reappointment of a professor after 3 years of service shall be deemed a permanent appointment, under which the Board had functioned for some 21 years, was valid and clearly within its authority. Reappointment of a professor after those years of service was a permanent appointment and his status not changed by the Board's striking the regulation from its rules printed on the back of the contract. State ex rel. Keeney v. Ayers, 108 M 547, 92 P2d 306 (1939).

Legislature to Define Powers and Duties: Article XI, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., merely vested control over educational institutions in the State Board of Education and authorized the Legislature to define and circumscribe the powers and duties of the Board. State ex rel. Dragstedt v. St. Bd. of Education, 103 M 336, 62 P2d 330 (1936); State ex rel. Veeder v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 121, 33 P2d 516 (1934).

Mandamus to Credit Three-Year High School: Granting Writ of Mandate to compel Board of Education to accredit school as 3-year high school before obtaining approval of Superintendent, in the absence of authority of board of trustees or prior legal demand upon Board to accredit the school, was error. State ex rel. School District v. Cooney, 102 M 521, 59 P2d 48 (1936).

Board Part of Executive Branch: The State Board of Education was a part of the executive department and subject to legislative control. State ex rel. P.S.C. v. Brannon, 86 M 200, 283 P 202 (1929).

Appeal to Board: Section authorizing an appeal from a decision of a board of school trustees on an application for transportation of pupils from their homes to a school, etc., to the State Board of Education, was not open to the objection under the 1889 Constitution. State ex rel. Stephens v. Keaster, 82 M 126, 266 P 387 (1928).

Establishment of County High Schools: Article XI, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., did not limit the legislative authority to establish and maintain common schools and institutions and was not offended by law (repealed) authorizing the establishment of county free high schools. Evers v. Hudson, 36 M 135, 92 P 462 (1907).

Board Created: The State Board of Education was created by the Legislature under the authority of Art. XI, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Koch v. Barret, 26 M 62, 66 P 504 (1901).

Attorney General's Opinions

Legislative Appropriation of University System "Excess" Revenue: The Attorney General concluded in an advisory opinion (in answer to question concerning hypothetical legislative action) that the Legislature may not appropriate revenue generated from sources pledged to cover university system revenue bond requirements when the revenue obtained from these sources exceeds the bond requirements. The law grants the Board of Regents authority to use pledged revenue in a variety of ways to discharge its statutory duties. Any legislative appropriation of those "excess" revenues would interfere with or prevent the discharge of those duties. 40 A.G. Op. 67 (1984).

Line Item Appropriations and Conditions: Because the constitution is a limit on and not a grant of authority to the Legislature, line item appropriations and conditions attached thereto are permissible so long as they do not intrude into areas that distinctly and uniquely belong under the jurisdiction of the Board of Regents. 36 A.G. Op. 2 (1975).

Status of Mandatory Student Fees — Expenditures: Since the authority to impose mandatory student fees is vested in the governing board of the Montana University System, a division of state government, and ultimate control and supervision of these funds rests with the Board of Regents, mandatory student fees are public funds. Whether a student committee can expend these funds to remove an elected public officer requires a decision by the Regents or their delegated agents that such expenditure is a public purpose. Electing a political officeholder would not be an expenditure for a public purpose. 35 A.G. Op. 74 (1974).

Pledge of Income From Land Grant Fund: The action of the State Board of Education in pledging the income and interest derived from the land grant fund of the university as security for repayment of any loan made to it for the erection of a journalism building at a state university was within its power and not in violation of Art. XI, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Wilson v. St. Bd. of Education, 102 M 165, 56 P2d 1079 (1936).

Construction of Normal School: Article XI, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const., was not violated by the enactment of laws authorizing the State Board of Education to pledge one-half of income to secure repayment of funds obtained from the federal government under the national recovery act, the funds so obtained to be used for the erection of buildings for the normal school. State ex rel. Blume v. St. Bd. of Education, 97 M 371, 34 P2d 515 (1934).

Limitations on Legislative Power: The provisions of section 7 of ordinance No. 1, with relation to grants of land made by the U.S.; of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., providing the manner of disposal of such land; and of Art. XI, sec. 2 and 12, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that the school fund derived from the proceeds of such land shall be guaranteed against loss or diversion, are limitations upon the power of disposal of school land by the Legislature. Newton v. Weiler, 87 M 164, 286 P 133 (1930).

Bonds Issued by Land Commissioner: Laws authorizing the State Board of Land Commissioners to issue and sell bonds, the proceeds to be applied to the erection, furnishing, and equipment of an addition to the normal school building, and pledging as security for the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds the lands granted by section 17 of The Enabling Act were void as being in violation of Art. XI, sec. 12, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Haire v. Rice, 33 M 365, 83 P 874 (1906), affirmed 204 US 291, 51 L Ed 490, 27 S Ct 281 (1907).

Regulations Prescribed by Law — Lease of College Lands: Pursuant to the Montana Constitution, the Legislature has enacted regulations under which, in default of sale, all agricultural and grazing lands may be leased under the direction of the State Board of Land Commissioners for terms not exceeding 5 years and requiring the revenues derived therefrom to be paid into the hands of the Treasurer. The lands selected for the use of the agricultural college under the grant by Congress are subject to these regulations. State ex rel. Koch v. Barret, 26 M 62, 66 P 504 (1901).

Public University Endowment Funds Not "Public Funds" — Not Required to be Invested Through Unified Investment Program: Article VIII, sec. 13, Mont. Const., does not require that endowments granted to Montana's public universities be invested through the unified investment program. 53 A.G. Op. 6 (2010).

Gift to Private Nonprofit Corporation: Under 20-8-111, the Board of Public Education, in its discretion, may give money that has been donated for the use and benefit of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind to a private nonprofit corporation created and controlled by the Board and operated for the benefit of that school. However, the Board remains accountable for the money until it is used directly for the general support, maintenance, or improvement of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind. 38 A.G. Op. 111 (1980).

Fee Waivers for Veterans for Extra Studies: The Board of Regents may not require veterans qualifying under the provisions of 10-2-311 (now repealed) to pay fees for extension or continuing education courses offered by units of the Montana University System. 37 A.G. Op. 167 (1978).

Use of Funds: This section requires that gifts to the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind be used only for the school's benefit and prohibits any diversion, direct or indirect, of the gifts. 36 A.G. Op. 106 (1976).

Carryover Balances: The Montana University System must carry over the balances in nongeneral fund accounts (earmarked revenue, private income, land grant income, etc.) from one biennium to the respective funds in the following biennium. The Board of Regents may expend the funds by approved budget amendment. 36 A.G. Op. 76 (1976).

Accreted Islands in River Held to Be School Trust Lands — Restitution Improper Absent Unjust Enrichment Claim — State Entitled to Costs: The state filed an action to quiet title to three islands in the Missouri River that had formed from sedimentary accretions on the riverbed. The District Court ruled that under the equal footing doctrine, the state held title to the disputed lands as public trust land, which could not be acquired by the defendants through adverse possession. The District Court also ruled, relying on PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, that these lands were not school trust lands. The District Court then ruled sua sponte that under the doctrine of unjust enrichment, the state was required to reimburse the defendants for all property taxes and improvements made on the land and ordered each party to pay its own costs and fees. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that under 77-1-102, these lands were school trust lands and that because the defendants never asserted an unjust enrichment claim, the state was not on notice and had no opportunity to oppose the reimbursements ordered by the District Court. Finally, the court held that under 25-10-101, the state as the prevailing party was entitled to recover certain costs. The court reversed the District Court's judgment and remanded the case to the District Court to determine and award the appropriate amount for costs. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Abbco Investments, LLC, 2012 MT 187, 366 Mont. 120, 285 P.3d 532.

Beds of Navigable Rivers Considered Public Trust Lands, Not School Trust Lands — Administration by Board of Land Commissioners: A question arose as to whether the beds of navigable Montana rivers are school trust lands or public trust lands. The District Court concluded that the riverbeds were public trust lands but then went on to hold that the riverbeds were school trust lands on the theory that the Board of Land Commissioners had authority to classify the riverbeds as school trust lands. The Supreme Court agreed that the beds of navigable rivers are public trust lands pursuant to Art. X, sec. 11, Mont. Const., but reversed the decision that the riverbeds are school trust lands. However, the Board is still required to administer the riverbeds in accordance with the trust obligations imposed by Art. X, sec. 11, Mont. Const. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed and remanded on other grounds in PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012). See also Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 Mont. 38, 682 P.2d 163 (1984).

Proper Application of Profitability Method of Determining Fair Market Value of Hydroelectric Facility's Damages Owed to State for Past Use of State-Owned Riverbeds — Future Lease Terms Left to Board of Land Commissioners: After holding that the state was entitled to compensation for use of state-owned riverbeds by plaintiff hydroelectric utility, the District Court applied a profitability methodology to determine the productive value of the land in order to arrive at a fair market value for plaintiff's use of the riverbeds. Plaintiff contested the methodology, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The state uses productive value of the land in determining lease rates, and nothing in Montana law barred an award of damages based on plaintiff's profits, so income-based leasing was an appropriate method to calculate past damages in this case. Use of the Hydroelectric Resources Act (HRA), Title 77, ch. 4, part 2, was a proper mechanism to assess past damages, and the District Court's findings in support of the award were not clearly erroneous. The District Court also correctly left to the discretion of the Board of Land Commissioners the terms of any future lease with plaintiff and properly held that the Board was not bound by the same method used to calculate past damages in developing future lease terms. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, following State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 Mont. 46, 409 P.2d 808 (1966).

Following the Montana Supreme Court's decision, PPL appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana court's ruling in part, holding that the Montana court had not properly considered the rivers in question on a segment-by-segment basis and had not determined whether they were navigable in fact at the time of statehood. The United States Supreme Court remanded the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion. PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

State Allowed Compensation for Hydroelectric Use of Riverbeds — No Preemption by Federal Law: Plaintiff PPL sought a declaratory judgment that the state was precluded from seeking compensation for the use of riverbeds at PPL's federally licensed hydroelectric dams on the Missouri, Clark Fork, and Madison Rivers. PPL asserted that the state law regulating the use of riverbeds was preempted by federal law and by the federal navigational servitude, which is the power of the U.S. Congress to ensure that navigable rivers remain open to interstate and foreign commerce. The state denied that federal law or the servitude preempted the state Hydroelectric Resources Act (HRA), Title 77, ch. 4, part 2, and counterclaimed for compensation for PPL's past and ongoing use of state riverbeds, as well as damages under theories of uncompensated use of state land, unjust enrichment, trespass, and negligence. The District Court agreed with the state, holding that the Federal Power Act (FPA) recognized the property rights of parties whose land is affected by federally licensed hydroelectric projects and specifically prohibits the use of private property without compensation, so the state was allowed to seek compensation. The court also concluded that the FPA explicitly permits the operation of state law regarding proprietary rights affected by a federally licensed facility, so the HRA was not preempted by the FPA. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421.

Following the Montana Supreme Court's decision, PPL appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed the Montana court's ruling in part, holding that the Montana court had not properly considered the rivers in question on a segment-by-segment basis and had not determined whether they were navigable in fact at the time of statehood. The United States Supreme Court remanded the case for proceedings consistent with its opinion. PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Harvest-Level Accounting of Timber Sales Not Required: Plaintiff challenged the methodology used by the state Board of Land Commissioners in approving the harvest and sale of timber in state forests, asserting that 77-1-202 required harvest-level accounting. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants, ruling that the statute did not require the Board to reconcile timber sale costs and benefits at the harvest level. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the statute, on its face, does not require accountings at all, but rather requires the Board to secure the largest measure of legitimate and reasonable advantage to the state. The court declined to insert what has been omitted from the statutory language, despite plaintiff's contention that a comprehensive economic evaluation was implicit in the statute. The court held that it could not be concluded that the Board has not secured or could not secure the largest measure of benefit from timber sales without harvest-level accounting, given the multiple purposes that the Board must fulfill with regard to school trust lands, the broad discretion and deference that the law provides to the Board in administering school trust lands, and current statutory accounting requirements. Thus, the Board is not legally required to conduct harvest-level review of timber sales and did not violate 77-1-202 when it decided to forego harvest-level financial reconciliation in a timber sale. Summary judgment was affirmed. Friends of the Wild Swan v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2005 MT 351, 330 M 186, 127 P3d 394 (2005). See also State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966), and Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999).

Accounting System Allowing Commingling of State Trust Revenue Constitutional: Plaintiff challenged the state's alleged improper commingling of state land trust assets, including rental and bonus payments on certain coal leases, into the general fund, asserting that the accounting system violated the state's duty to obtain full market value for school trust lands. The District Court concluded that plaintiff failed to prove financial harm to the school trust beneficiaries, particularly when the Legislature's appropriation to public schools far exceeded the combined money provided by the interest income and the bonus payments. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The state satisfied its trust obligations by demonstrating that its accounting system was sufficiently accurate and complete to allow plaintiff to ascertain that all trust revenue goes to benefit public schools, while plaintiff failed to carry its burden of proving that the state withheld either the interest income or the bonus payments or improperly diverted those funds to nontrust purposes. Thus, the state statutory scheme did not breach the state's trustee duty by requiring the deposit of interest income and bonus payments into the general fund. State Loan in Exchange for Full Market Value of Future Stream of Mineral Royalties Without Appraisal Not Violative of Fiduciary Duty to Preserve State Land Trust — Valuation of Future Stream Affirmed: Senate Bill No. 495 (2001) authorized the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to borrow up to $75 million from the coal trust severance tax permanent fund for 30 years to buy mineral production royalties owned by the school trust in order to enhance short-term distributable revenue from the permanent fund for the benefit of public schools. Plaintiff asserted that this statutory scheme violated the state's school trust duties by using an arbitrary method of determining the appropriate discount rate and by not requiring an independent appraisal to determine full market value of the future royalty stream. The District Court concluded that the state's method of determining the appropriate discount rate was neither arbitrary nor a breach of the duty to obtain fair market value, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed that the discount rate was reasonable and reflected the full market value of the future stream of mineral royalties. Additionally, an independent appraisal was not necessary because when the state sells only an estate or interest in land, the state has ample power to determine the method by which to ascertain the full market value of the estate or interest. The State Board of Land Commissioners bears the task of ensuring that the trust receives full market value for state land interests, and the Supreme Court declined to substitute its opinion for that of the Land Board unless the Land Board's action is arbitrary. Plaintiff failed to show that the Senate Bill No. 495 financing scheme was unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, and the Supreme Court affirmed that the state, by balancing the interests of present and future beneficiaries of the school trust through Senate Bill No. 495, fully complied with the Montana Constitution, The Enabling Act, and state statutes and thus did not violate its trust duties. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. Darkenwald, 2005 MT 190, 328 M 105, 119 P3d 27 (2005), following Toomey v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 106 M 547, 81 P2d 407 (1938), and State ex rel. Hughes v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 137 M 510, 353 P2d 331 (1960).

Failure to Distinguish Between Commercially Valuable and Nonvaluable Timber as Firewood on State Lands Violative of Trust Duty of Undivided Loyalty: Pursuant to 77-5-211, the state discretionarily issued free permits for the gathering of dead, down, or inferior wood from school trust lands for use as firewood. The District Court concluded that 77-5-211 authorizes the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to act in violation of the school trust by allowing the Department to give away commercially valuable timber, in violation of its trust duty of undivided loyalty. The state argued on appeal that the District Court's conclusions were incorrect because the Department retained discretion to issue permits and because plaintiff failed to show that dead wood had commercial value in all instances. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Wild W. Motors, Inc. v. Lingle, 224 M 76, 728 P2d 412, 43 St. Rep. 2030 (1986), in considering the state's duty of undivided loyalty as trustee of school trust lands, noting that a trustee must act with the utmost good faith toward the beneficiary and may not act in the trustee's own interest or in the interest of a third party. In failing to distinguish between commercially valuable timber and timber that lacks commercial value, the statute allows the Department to issue permits to third parties without charging them for any commercially valuable wood that they collect, violating both the mandate that full market value be obtained for school trust lands and the state's trust duty of undivided loyalty. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Market Value of State Land Rights-of-Way Set by Statute at 1972 Levels — Unconstitutionality: The plain language of 77-1-130 requires that full market valuations of right-of-way acreage for historic deeds on state trust lands be based on the median values for the classifications of land at 1972 levels, leaving the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation no choice but to use those levels instead of current market value. The state argued that pursuant to 40 A.G. Op. 24 (1983), the figures in 77-1-130 are merely a minimum above which the Department may charge full market value. However, the statutory language is mandatory rather than discretionary and violates the provisions of the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act, which require the state to receive full market value for school trust lands, and thus is unconstitutional. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

State Land Cabin Site Renewal Policy Not Violative of Obligation to Obtain Full Market Value: Plaintiff contended that 77-1-208 is facially invalid because the use of a cabin site renewal policy that did not employ competitive bidding was calculated to keep cabin site rental rates below full market value. However, nothing in the plain language of 77-1-208 abrogates the mandate that full market value be obtained for school trust lands. Plaintiff failed to show that the statute violates the duty of undivided loyalty or that the preference accorded lessees on cabin site leases on state lands resulted in renewal rates below market value. The statute legislatively establishes a method by which full market value is obtained, which is allowed pursuant to Jerke v. Dept. of State Lands, 182 M 294, 597 P2d 49 (1979), but the language of 77-1-208 nevertheless requires that full market value be obtained, by whatever method is used, and therefore on its face does not violate the trust. Thus, the District Court correctly held that the renewal preference in 77-1-208 does not violate the school trust requirements of the Montana Constitution or The Enabling Act of 1889. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

State Land Cabin Site Rental Policy Violative of School Trust Obligation to Obtain Fair Market Value: The policy employed by the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation in renting cabin sites on state lands, in a manner that resulted in below-market rentals, violated the state's school trust obligations under the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act of 1889, even though 77-1-208 is facially valid because it requires that full market value be obtained. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966), and Jerke v. Dept. of State Lands, 182 M 294, 597 P2d 49 (1979).

Statute Allowing State Lands to Remain Idle While Lessees Determine Value of Improvements — Unconstitutionality: Under 77-6-305, the value of improvements placed on the leasehold by a former lessee is required to be paid by the new lessee before the new lease may be issued if the former lessee chose not to remove the improvements. The District Court found the provision constitutional even though it might result in less revenue because of delay caused by lease delays, concluding that the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation must have latitude to administer school trust lands. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that portion of 77-6-305 unconstitutional on its face. The state's discretion to administer the trust is broad, but not unlimited, and must conform to the requirements of the trust. The statute allows trust lands to idle indefinitely while former and new lessees determine the value of the improvements, which is inconsistent with the trust mandate that full market value be received for the lands. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Statute Allowing Uncompensated Time for Removing Improvements Violative of Full Benefit of Trust Lands and Trust Duty of Undivided Loyalty: Under 77-6-304, a former state land leaseholder was allowed up to 60 days to remove movable improvements without charge. The state contended that the statute does not violate any fiduciary duty, but merely allows the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation time to inventory improvements on state lands, with no quantifiable impact on the trust fund. Conceding that the policy could reduce potential profits to the trust, the District Court nevertheless found that: (1) nothing in the statute prevents the Department from charging former lessees for storage of improvements after termination of their leases; (2) the statute does not prevent a new lessee from moving onto trust land before the former lessee has removed the improvements; and (3) it was reasonably necessary for the Department to allow former lessees some extra time to remove improvements, especially in winter months when most agricultural leases expire. The Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that 77-6-304 plainly authorizes the Department to allow former lessees to remain free of charge on trust lands while removing improvements, denying the trust beneficiaries the full benefit of the trust lands and violating the duty of undivided loyalty by benefiting third parties to the detriment of the trust beneficiaries. The statute was declared unconstitutional on its face. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999). See also Lassen v. Ariz. Highway Dept., 385 US 458, 17 L Ed 2d 515, 87 S Ct 584 (1967).

Maximization of Income From School Trust Lands Not to Preclude Nonagricultural Uses: Shoberg transferred his grazing permit to Madden, and Madden changed from grazing cattle to grazing sheep. The Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) allowed the grazing of sheep to continue, notwithstanding that the Department had information indicating that the grazing of sheep would adversely impact upon bighorn sheep reintroduced into the area. The plaintiffs brought an action to require the completion of an environmental impact statement (EIS). The Supreme Court held that an EIS was required and that the Department's duty to maximize income from school trust lands did not exempt the Department from its obligation to comply with state environmental statutes. The Supreme Court also held that maximizing income is "a" consideration but not "the" consideration regarding school trust lands and is not paramount to the exclusion of wildlife or environmental considerations. Ravalli County Fish & Game Ass'n, Inc. v. Dept. of State Lands, 273 M 371, 903 P2d 1362, 52 St. Rep. 996 (1995).

School Trust Land Water Rights Owned by State: In a case involving a dispute over ownership of water rights on state school trust lands, the Supreme Court ruled that title to the surface and ground water rights on school trust lands vests in the state and that the lessee, in making appropriations on and for school trust sections, is acting on behalf of the state. It is only through state action that the lessee is on the land, and Montana law expressly provides that the lessee shall be reimbursed for all capital expenditures made in putting the water to beneficial use. The state is the beneficial user of the water, and its duty as trustee of the school trust lands prohibits it from alienating any interest in the land without receiving full compensation for it or from giving up control over the water rights. Dept. of State Lands v. Pettibone, 216 M 361, 702 P2d 948, 42 St. Rep. 869 (1985).

Sale Without Authority — Deed Void: Because it holds land in public trust and it failed to comply with statutory requirements for land sales, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) was without authority to make the sale of land. The deed derived from the sale without authority was held void. Therefore, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) cannot be estopped from denying the validity of the deed. Norman v. St., 182 M 439, 597 P2d 715 (1979).

Grazing District — Preference Rights Unconstitutional: A preference right under 77-6-205(1) allows a lessee contracting with the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) to renew his lease by meeting the high bid of other applicants upon expiration of his lease. However, this preference right was held unconstitutionally applied when exercised by a grazing district which did not use the land itself but instead subleased to whomever it wished. The only way full market value can be obtained in such a situation is by pure competitive bidding. Jerke v. Dept. of St. Lands, 182 M 294, 597 P2d 49 (1979).

"Market Value" — Test for Lease of Farm Land: The test of "willing buyer-willing seller" has little applicability in awarding a lease to farm land by the state. A more appropriate test is the value of similar leases in the particular community, coupled with the applicant's ability as a farmer and other variables to be considered by the state in securing as large a return as possible on the land, while preserving its productive capacity. State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966), followed in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Leasing for Underground Storage: The law authorizing the lease of state lands for underground storage of natural gas did not violate Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Hughes v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 137 M 510, 353 P2d 331 (1960).

"Market Value" — Royalties and Bonuses: A bid carrying a higher bonus but lower royalty prevailed over one offering a higher royalty but a lower bonus. State ex rel. Strandberg v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 131 M 65, 307 P2d 234 (1957).

Conveyance by Armory Board Unconstitutional: Law insofar as permitting the Armory Board to convey an armory and land upon which it is situated to a city was unconstitutional as it violated Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Olsen v. Armory Bd., 128 M 344, 275 P2d 652 (1954).

Lands as Including Mineral Rights: The word "lands" includes mineral rights although Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., had no mineral classification. Texas Pac. Coal & Oil Co. v. St., 125 M 258, 234 P2d 452 (1951).

Sale Under Wrong Procedure Held Void: The implied powers of the State Board of Land Commissioners under 77-1-202 must not be inconsistent with any part of the Constitution. A sale of a tract of 160 acres of state lands lying within 3 miles of a city or town and falling within class four of Art. XVII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., which under the following constitutional provision could only be sold in alternate lots of not more than 5 acres each, was void. State ex rel. Boorman v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 109 M 127, 94 P2d 201 (1939).

Oil and Gas Pooling on School Lands: Under section 11 of The Enabling Act and Art. XVII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., the state was authorized to sell or lease its lands and to this end could enter into a "consolidated lease and operating agreement" with private owners of other lands whereby school lands and private lands are pooled for developing and exploiting their oil and gas possibilities. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 106 M 547, 81 P2d 407 (1938).

Public Sale Not Required — Estate in Land Sold: When an estate or interest in state lands is sold, as distinguished from the land itself, there need not be a public sale and advertising unless the Legislature so directs. The Legislature has ample power to determine the method by which to ascertain the full market value of estate or interest sold. Toomey v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 106 M 547, 81 P2d 407 (1938).

"Market Value" — Value at Time of Lease: The provision of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., against leasing state lands at less than "the full market value" was met if the board secured such value as existed at the time the lease was issued. Rathbone v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 100 M 109, 47 P2d 47 (1935).

Optional Renewal of Grazing Lease:

Provision that leases shall at lessee's option be extended for 3 additional years is a valid regulation of the land department and did not violate Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., although a higher rental be offered. Rathbone v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 100 M 109, 47 P2d 47 (1935).

Laws providing for extension of leases of grazing lands for additional period of 3 years at option of lessees were "general", not "special" law, since it applied to all in class of short-term leasers. Leuthold v. Brandjord, 100 M 96, 47 P2d 41 (1935).

Leasing of Land as Constituting Disposal of Interest: An estate for years is an interest in land, and the alienation of an interest by lease for years is a disposal of such interest. The prohibition of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., applied to the leasing of grazing lands. Rider v. Cooney, 94 M 295, 23 P2d 261 (1933). See Leuthold v. Brandjord, 100 M 96, 47 P2d 41 (1935).

Limitations on Legislative Power: The provisions with relation to grants of land made by the United States to the state; of Art. XVII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., providing the manner of disposal of such land; and of Art. XI, sec. 2 and 12, 1889 Mont. Const., providing that the school fund derived from the proceeds of such land shall be guaranteed against loss or diversion, are limitations upon the power of disposal of school land by the Legislature. Rider v. Cooney, 94 M 295, 23 P2d 261 (1933); Newton v. Weiler, 87 M 164, 286 P 133 (1930).

"Market Value" — Actual Value: Full "market value" means actual value. Rider v. Cooney, 94 M 295, 23 P2d 261 (1933).

"Town" Defined — Three-Mile Limit for Sale of Lands in Towns — How Measured: The word "town", within the meaning of Art. XVII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., is an aggregation of inhabitants and houses used for various purposes so close to one another that the inhabitants may be said to dwell together, upon a regularly platted townsite, whether incorporated or not. The 3-mile distance from the limits of towns within which school lands cannot be sold, under the inhibition of Art. XVII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., must be measured from the nearest point upon the townsite plat. Davis v. Stewart, 54 M 429, 171 P 281 (1918).

Leasing: State lands are divided into four classes, of which class 4 comprises "lands within the limits of any town or city, or within three miles of such limits". While lands of the first and third class may be sold or leased, the Board of Land Commissioners is commanded to sell lands of the fourth class, and nothing is said about leasing them. If, however, authority to lease such lands be held to be derived from The Enabling Act, the utmost that can be said is that permission was given the state to lease without requiring it to do so. State ex rel. Gibson v. Stewart, 50 M 404, 147 P 276 (1915).

Acquisition of Land — Limitation on Power to Dispose: Neither Art. XVII, sec. 1, nor Art. XI, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., dealt with the subject of the capacity of the state to acquire property. Both are limitations upon the power of disposal by the Legislature. In re Beck's Estate, 44 M 561, 121 P 784 (1912).

Sale or Leasing of Lands Granted by United States: Public lands granted to the state by the United States are subject to public sale. State ex rel. Galen v. District Court, 42 M 105, 112 P 706 (1910).

Inapplicable to Lands Granted to State: The provisions of Art. XVII, 1889 Mont. Const., related to such lands as the state has acquired or may acquire after they are selected under the laws provided for that purpose and were not applicable to lands granted to the state. State ex rel. Armington v. Wright, 17 M 565, 44 P 89 (1896).

Land Acquired by Foreclosure: Real property acquired by the Board of Investments through a foreclosure of a Public Employees' Retirement System mortgage is state land as defined by this section. 36 A.G. Op. 104 (1976).

Mineral Interest as Distinguished From Royalty Interest — No Unconstitutional Gift: Where a contract for deed contained a reservation of a mineral interest to the county but a later deed reserved only a royalty interest, the District Court held that this amounted to an unconstitutional gift to a private individual. The Supreme Court reversed, saying that the agreed statement of facts did not show the comparative values of royalty and mineral interests in this particular land. McSweyn v. What Electors Considered Qualified Voters for County Zoning Initiatives: A zoning regulation is subject to citizen initiative, and nothing in county zoning law limits qualified electors to only voters living in the area affected by the zoning regulations. Thus, in the case of county zoning regulation initiatives effective in all unincorporated areas of a county, all county residents are considered qualified voters, including those residing within incorporated areas of the county. 52 A.G. DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Exclusion of Land by Legislature: Act excluding from Gallatin County land included in Yellowstone Park without including it in other counties, boundaries of which were likewise redefined thereby, was invalid as contravening Constitution which authorized Legislature only to settle disputes concerning or to change common county boundaries, not to destroy them by excluding lands along them from both counties. Yellowstone Park Transp. Co. v. Gallatin County, 27 F2d 410 (9th Cir. 1928), reversed in Yellowstone Park Transp. Co. v. Gallatin County, 31 F2d 644 (9th Cir. 1929).

Removal of County Seat — Political Question: Conceding that the selection or removal of a county seat is a political function, the Constitution, as well as the legislation upon the subject, confides that function not to judges of election or the canvassers of the returns but to a certain proportion of the qualified electors of the county affected. Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916).

Removal of County Seat — Legislative Power — Vote Required: The provision of Art. XVI, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., denying power to the Legislature to remove a county seat, insofar as it related to the vote required, was a prohibition and was self-executing. State ex rel. Stringfellow v. DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Affidavit — Public Document: The provisions of Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const., apply to local government. The Clerk of the District Court is an office of local government. An affidavit filed with the Clerk of a District Court in support of a motion for leave to file a criminal charge or warrant is a document of a public body or agency of a subdivision of state government. Assoc. Press v. St., 250 M 299, 820 P2d 421, 48 St. Rep. 958 (1991).

Test of Statute's Constitutionality: The constitutionality of a statute is tested by the constitution in effect when the law was enacted. The recodification of a statute does not act as a reenactment of the law but is merely a ministerial and administrative function. Therefore, appellant could not be denied his right to hold the office of County Surveyor because 7-4-2801 was violative of the 1889 Constitution at its inception and was not reenacted under the 1972 Constitution. Gallatin County v. McClue, 222 M 201, 721 P2d 338, 43 St. Rep. 1174 (1986).

Classification of Existing Form of Government: The classification of the existing form of government under 7-3-111 through 7-3-114 is not an imposition of any particular form of government upon a local body but rather complies with the constitutional mandates of Art. XI, Mont. Const. Schuman v. Study Comm'n of Yellowstone County, 176 M 313, 578 P2d 291 (1978).

COUNTY OFFICERS

County Officers — Salary: County officers elected or appointed before enactment of the 1969 amendment to the formula salary law (7-4-2503) were not entitled during their then current terms to raises in salaries or emoluments therein provided. Shubat v. St., 157 M 143, 484 P2d 278 (1971).

"Resided": The word "reside" as used in Art. XVI, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., signifies the place where the candidate has actually lived and maintained his home and where he was personally present. Under the rule that mere intention to locate at a place does not establish residence until one is physically there, held, that a candidate for County Commissioner who indicated his intention to locate within the district but took no active step looking to that end until 5 days short of the 2-year period prior to his election there was not qualified to become a candidate and his election void. Snyder v. Boulware, 109 M 427, 96 P2d 913 (1939).

County Commissioners — Vacancy: The power to fill a vacancy in the office of County Commissioner is conferred by Art. XVI, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., upon the District Judge of the district in which the vacancy occurs and the provisions of the statute enacted in pursuance thereof. Although it is vested in a judicial officer, it is not a prerequisite to its exercise that it be invoked by an application in the form of a complaint or petition, nor is the validity of its exercise in a given case made dependent in any measure upon facts judicially ascertained to exist. The appointing officer pronounces no decree, nor does he adjudicate any right. His action is the result of an opinion based upon personal knowledge of the existence of the vacancy or information derived from any source which he deems reliable. State ex rel. Dowen v. District Court, 50 M 249, 146 P 467 (1915).

Appointment of School Superintendent Upon Vacancy: Section providing that in case of a tie vote for a county officer, except County Commissioner, the County Commissioners shall appoint some eligible person to fill the office, as in the case of the other vacancies in such office, was invalid as to County Superintendent of Schools and other officers named in Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Chenoweth v. Acton, 31 M 37, 77 P 299 (1904).

County Auditor: The office of County Auditor was not expressly provided for in the 1889 Constitution. State ex rel. McGinniss v. Dickinson, 26 M 391, 68 P 468 (1902).

Appointing Commissioners — New County: In an act creating a new county, the Legislative Assembly may provisionally appoint the officers thereof, including the County Commissioners, who are entitled to serve for the full constitutional term, which begins at the first general election succeeding the creation of the county and is not computed quadrennially from the adoption of the Constitution in 1889. State ex rel. Williams v. Mayhew, 21 M 93, 52 P 981 (1898).

TREASURER

Applicability of Primary Election Law: The primary election law applies to all situations where it can be made reasonably operative. Where a County Treasurer, elected in November, 1942, for a 4-year term ending March 1, 1947, died after he had qualified and before commencement of the term for which he was elected, the appointee of the County Commissioners under Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., would hold until next general election on November 7, 1944, and procedure under the primary election law, section 23-901, et seq., R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., is controlling. A vacancy occurring after the primary and prior to the general election or at any other inapplicable time authorizes nomination under section 23-801 or 23-804, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), section 23-909, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), then not applying. LaBorde v. McGrath, 116 M 283, 149 P2d 913 (1944).

Collection of Tax by Withholding: Laws (now repealed) making the operator of a mine or oil well jointly liable with the holder of a royalty interest for the payment of the tax assessed against the royalty and authorizing the operator to withhold from the proceeds of the royalty interest the amount of any tax thereon paid by him were not open to the constitutional objection that the operator is thus made the collector of the tax on the royalty interest, contrary to the Constitution. This method of collecting the tax by the operator at the source of the product is permissible as a certain and expeditious one calculated to prevent the possibility of any of it escaping taxation. Byrne v. Fulton Oil Co., 85 M 329, 278 P 514 (1929).

County Treasurer: Only the County Treasurer has the power to collect taxes. Pohl v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 52 M 572, 160 P 515 (1916); Butte v. Bennetts, 51 M 27, 149 P 92 (1915); Miss. River Power Co. v. Steele, 32 M 433, 80 P 1093 (1905); Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Martien, 27 M 437, 71 P 470 (1903).

Collection of City Taxes: The provisions authorizing the collection of city taxes by the City Treasurer were not in violation of Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., when construed in connection with Art. XII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Butte v. Weston, 29 M 125, 74 P 415 (1903).

MUNICIPALITIES

Counties Not Included in "Municipal Corporations": That the framers of the Montana Constitution did not intend municipal corporations to include counties is clear, for the two terms are used, as in Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., to distinguish different organizations. Hersey v. Neilson, 47 M 132, 131 P 30 (1913).

Term of Police Officer: Since a policeman or police officer does not fall within the class designated as "municipal officers" in Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., the Legislature did not transcend its power in providing that his term of office shall extend during good behavior or until he shall become incapacitated by age or disease. State ex rel. Wynne v. Quinn, 40 M 472, 107 P 506 (1910).

"Municipal" Defined: The word "municipal" found in Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., is used in its restricted sense, meaning "city". State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 38 M 250, 99 P 940 (1908).

"Municipal Officers": Strictly speaking, a policeman is not a "municipal" officer—that is, a "city" officer—as that term is used in Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const.; nor is such officer a mere servant or employee of the municipality. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 38 M 250, 99 P 940 (1908).

CITY-COUNTY GOVERNMENT

City-County Planning Board: A city-county planning board established without reference to the electors was in violation of Art. XVI, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const. Plath v. Hi-Ball Contractors, Inc., 139 M 263, 362 P2d 1021 (1961).

City-County Consolidation: Laws authorizing the consolidation of Silver Bow County and Butte into one municipal corporation under Art. XVI, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const., were not objectionable as depriving the people of that county and city of the power of local self-government or as denying to a creditor of either the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution. State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

TERM OF OFFICE

Where Amendment by Election Was Self-Executing: Chapter 93, L. 1937, amending Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., by changing the terms of certain county officers from 2 to 4 years, was a self-executing amendment becoming effective on Nov. 8, 1938, the date of the general election, without proclamation of the Governor, regardless of its provision that such proclamation would make it effective, and the officers chosen at the same election were elected for 4 years. State ex rel. O'Connell v. Duncan, 108 M 141, 88 P2d 73 (1939).

Term of Office — Municipal Officers: Under Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., the terms of office of municipal officers must not exceed 2 years. Under 2-16-213, every officer must continue to discharge his duties, although his term has expired, until his successor has qualified. Held, that unless the term of office of such officers as fixed by statute is so plainly at odds with that prescribed by the constitutional provision above as to be wholly inconsistent with it, the statute should be upheld. State ex rel. Sandquist v. Rogers, 93 M 355, 18 P2d 617 (1933).

Commissioners — Staggered Terms: Held, that while the people in amending Art. XVI, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., extending the terms of office of County Commissioners to 6 years and providing that beginning with 1906 one Commissioner should be elected at each general election for 6 years, thus always maintaining a board, two members of which should at all times be experienced men, did not declare that the plan so established should apply in the creation of new counties, it was their clear intention that it should apply and be made effectual in new counties at as early a time as possible. State ex rel. Foot v. Rogge, 80 M 1, 257 P 1029 (1927).

"Term" Defined: The word "term" as used by Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., and 2-16-501, with reference to the election or appointment of municipal officers, applies to the office and not to the person holding it. State ex rel. Morgan v. Knight, 76 M 71, 245 P 267 (1926).

Fixed Term: For the county officers mentioned in Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., who have been elected to their positions, the Constitution plainly contemplates a fixed term of 2 years with a contingent occupancy until their successors are elected and qualified. State ex rel. Dunne v. Smith, 53 M 341, 163 P 784 (1917).

Term of Appointees — Next General Election: The vacancies in county offices referred to in the last clause of Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., the appointees to fill which shall hold until the next succeeding general election, are those occurring after the fixed term has commenced but before a general election, and no appointment holds good beyond the next succeeding general election, whether the interval between it and the fixed term be great or small. State ex rel. Dunne v. Smith, 53 M 341, 163 P 784 (1917).

Term of Office for Appointees: Under section 7-4-2206, declaring that the appointees to vacancies in county offices shall hold until the next general election, the statute which extends the tenure of such appointees "until the first Monday in January next after a general election" was invalid. State ex rel. Rowe v. Kehoe, 49 M 582, 144 P 162 (1914).

Vacancies: The language contained in the last sentence of Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., should be read in connection with the sentence occurring in Art. XVI, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., that "a vacancy in the board of county commissioners shall be filled by appointment by the judge of the judicial district in which the vacancy occurs". The meaning expressed is as follows: vacancies in all county, township, and precinct offices shall be filled by appointment, and the appointee shall hold his office until the next general election; vacancies in the office of County Commissioner shall be filled by appointment by the District Judge of the district in which the vacancy occurs; and vacancies in all other offices shall be filled by appointment by the Board of County Commissioners. State ex rel. Rowe v. Kehoe, 49 M 582, 144 P 162 (1914); State ex rel. McGowan v. Sedgwick, 46 M 187, 127 P 94 (1912).

Terms of County Officers: Article XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., regulates the terms of all county officers. State ex rel. Jones v. Foster, 39 M 583, 104 P 860 (1909).

MISCELLANEOUS

Legal Residence — Actual Residence: Held, that the term "resided" has the same meaning as where used elsewhere in the Constitution when dealing with the right to hold public office, and Art. IX, sec. 2, 3, 7, and 11, 1889 Mont. Const., shed some light upon this question. A "legal residence" may be at a different place from actual residence, under our Constitution and section 23-522, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Under the facts stated, the court was justified in finding the contestee resided in the district wherein he was elected, differentiating the case at bar from one wherein the candidate sought to establish a legal residence where he had never lived or established a home. Wilson v. Hoisington, 110 M 20, 98 P2d 369 (1940).

Judicial Officers Not Included Herein: The offices of Clerk of the District Court, County Attorney, and Justice of the Peace, being enumerated in the Constitution as judicial offices, are to be excluded from the enumeration of the offices referred to in Art. XVI, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. It refers only to the offices of Sheriff, Treasurer, County Clerk, Assessor, Auditor, Superintendent of Common Schools, County Surveyor, Coroner, and Public Administrator. State ex rel. Rowe v. Kehoe, 49 M 582, 144 P 162 (1914).

Drain Commissioner — Provision for Authority: In view of the provisions of Art. XVI, sec. 6, 1889 Mont. Const., the Legislative Assembly had the authority, as expressed in the drainage district law of 1905, to authorize the Commissioners of each county desiring to avail itself of the benefits of the act to appoint a drain commissioner. The commissioner had certain powers, among which was his authority to fix assessments to be paid by those directly benefited by the construction of drains. The assessment was to be collected through the agency of the regular county officers. The Legislature could, for convenience in carrying out the object of the statute, create new agencies in addition to availing itself of existing ones. Billings Sugar Co. v. Fish, 40 M 256, 106 P 565 (1910).

Recommendation of Shorter Terms of Office by Local Government Study Commission: A local government study commission may recommend that terms of office for County Commissioners be less than 6 years if the county has adopted the statutory county "commission form" of government. A local government study commission may not recommend that the terms of office for County Commissioners be less than 6 years if the county has retained the form of government organized under the statutes listed in 7-3-111. 41 A.G. Op. 51 (1986).

Failure to Adopt Alternate Form of Government: A local government which fails in an election to adopt an alternate form of government in the manner provided by Art. XI, sec. 3 and 9, Mont. Const., is bound by the features of the existing form of government. The provisions of 7-3-201 through 7-3-224 allow voters to adopt a mayor-council structure with either partisan or nonpartisan elections. The procedures for recommending such a change are set forth in 7-3-121 through 7-3-161 and 7-3-171 through 7-3-193. If a nonpartisan election structure is not adopted, local elections must be conducted on a partisan basis after May 2, 1977, under the provisions of 7-3-113. 41 A.G. Op. 37 (1985).

Elected County Official's Salary — Established by County: The Montana Constitution grants the Legislature authority to allow counties to establish the salaries of elected county officials. 38 A.G. Op. 91 (1980).

Election on Annexation of Portions of Yellowstone Park: Eligible residents of the portion of Yellowstone National Park proposed for annexation into Park County under Ch. 447, L. 1977, must be accorded the opportunity to vote on the question of annexation. A majority vote must be attained both among voters registered in Park County and among voters who reside in the area to be annexed in order to ratify the annexation. 37 A.G. Op. 161 (1978).

Consolidated Offices — Ballot Listing: It is within the discretion of the Board of County Commissioners to designate how consolidated county offices may be listed on the primary and general election ballots. 37 A.G. Op. 141 (1978).

Consolidation of Offices: The County Commissioners may consolidate the offices of County Treasurer and County Superintendent of Schools into one office. The officeholder of the consolidated offices must meet the minimum qualifications for both offices. 35 A.G. Op. 31 (1973).

Method of Paying County Attorneys' Salaries: Upon implementation of the Constitution of Montana, 1972, July 1, 1973, the salaries of County Attorneys shall be payable monthly, one-half from the general fund of the county and the other half from the state treasury, upon the warrant of the State Auditor. 35 A.G. Op. 15 (1973).

Section 4. General powers.

Convention Notes

New provision allowing legislature to grant legislative, administrative and other powers to local government units.

Case Notes

Repeal of City Resolution Via Referendum Invalid: Plaintiffs challenged a referendum approved by voters in the city of Whitefish, which repealed a city resolution that authorized the city to enter into an interlocal agreement with the county concerning planning and zoning authority over a 2-mile area around the city, arguing that the resolution was not subject to the right of voter initiative and referendum. The District Court determined that the resolution was an administrative act by the city and was therefore not subject to repeal by referendum. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the guidelines adopted in Whitehall v. Preece, 1998 MT 53, 288 Mont. 55, 956 P.2d 743, to determine whether the action by the city was administrative or legislative in nature and affirmed, concluding that the city's action had significant administrative characteristics, which made it not subject to repeal by referendum. Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442.

Development and Use Agreement Not Precluding City From Entering Agreement for Construction Project on Public Property — Franchise Agreement Outside Scope of Citizen Group's Agreement With City: A citizen's group entered a franchise agreement with a professional baseball organization to bring a team to Missoula. After two potential sites were rejected, the city of Missoula accepted a gift of property upon which to construct a baseball facility and granted the citizen group the right to finance and construct the stadium on the property and to convey the completed facility to the city. The citizen group moved to enjoin the city from development of the proposed civic baseball stadium because of the city's failure to comply with statutory requirements for planning, funding, and managing the facility. All claims were dismissed on summary judgment, and the citizen group appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The development and use agreements in this case did not preclude the city from executing an agreement with another entity for the construction of a similar facility on public property or from leasing a city-owned facility for baseball games or any other purpose. Any franchise agreement between the baseball organization and the citizen group was outside the scope of the group's agreement with the city, so the voter-approval provisions of 7-5-4321 did not apply. The citizen group's argument that the city was required to comply with urban renewal laws also failed. The decision whether to proceed with development under the urban renewal statutes was up to the city, and the fact that the city designated the capital improvements associated with the stadium construction as an urban renewal project did not require that the citizen group's building project come under the same purview. Rather, under 7-16-4106, the city is permitted to obtain an athletic field and civic stadium through purchase, donation, or condemnation and to regulate its use, but nothing in the statute prohibits the city from designating a stadium project as an urban renewal project or mandates that the project be designated as an urban renewal project. The District Court properly found that the city appropriately exercised its administrative authority in accepting the gift property and then leasing the site to the citizen group for purposes of constructing a stadium using private financial resources. The citizen group failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Fair Play Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula, 2002 MT 179, 311 M 22, 52 P3d 926 (2002).

Guidelines for Distinguishing Between Legislative and Administrative Acts of Local Government — Initiative and Referendum Power Reserved for Legislative Acts Only: Beginning with Billings v. Nore, 148 M 96, 417 P2d 458 (1966), the Supreme Court recognized a distinction between legislative acts, which are subject to the powers of initiative and referendum, and administrative or quasi-judicial acts, which are not. Because local governments are empowered by this section, to exercise legislative, administrative, and other powers, the question arose as to whether 7-5-131 unconstitutionally limits local government referendum power to resolutions and ordinances within the legislative jurisdiction. In order to clarify the distinction between legislative and administrative acts of a local government, the Supreme Court adopted the following guidelines in Wichita v. Kans. Taxpayers Network, 874 P2d 667 (Kans. 1994): (1) An ordinance that makes new law is legislative, while an ordinance that executes an existing law is administrative. Permanency and generality are key features of a legislative ordinance. (2) Acts that declare public purpose and provide ways and means to accomplish that purpose generally may be classified as legislative. Acts that deal with a small segment of an overall policy question generally are administrative. (3) Decisions that require specialized training and experience in municipal government and intimate knowledge of the fiscal and other affairs of a city in order to make a rational choice may properly be characterized as administrative, even though they may also be said to involve the establishment of a policy. (4) No act of a governing body is likely to be solely administrative or legislative, and the operation of the initiative and referendum statute is restricted to measures that are quite clearly and fully legislative and not principally executive or administrative. In the present case, an ordinance that implemented the use of water meters as part of a town's water system improvement plan was an administrative act that was not subject to referendum. The District Court properly declared a referendum challenging the ordinance invalid. The Supreme Court affirmed the constitutionality of 7-5-131. Whitehall v. Preece, 1998 MT 53, 288 M 55, 956 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 219 (1998), followed in Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442, and overruling Chouteau County v. Grossman, 172 M 373, 563 P2d 1125 (1977), and Dieruf v. Bozeman, 173 M 447, 568 P2d 127 (1977), to the extent that those decisions stand for the rule that a local government's act is administrative based solely on a statutory grant of authority.

Municipal Ordinance Limiting University Students' Parking Rights Not Violation of Equal Protection: A university student association challenged the legality of a city ordinance limiting parking in residential areas near the university to residents of those areas. The Supreme Court held that resident and nonresident classifications do not result in invidious discrimination and that the ordinance had valid objectives, such as limiting congestion and meeting safety concerns, and therefore was legal. Assoc. Students v. Missoula, 261 M 231, 862 P2d 380, 50 St. Rep. 1301 (1993).

Municipality's Authority to Adopt Ordinance Limiting University Students' Rights to Park on City Streets: A university student association challenged the legality of a city ordinance limiting parking in residential areas near the university to residents of those areas. The Supreme Court held that municipalities have the power to regulate parking and that regulating parking to relieve congestion in certain residential neighborhoods was a reasonable exercise of governmental authority. Assoc. Students v. Missoula, 261 M 231, 862 P2d 380, 50 St. Rep. 1301 (1993).

County May Bring Action for Acquisition by Prescription: The defendant argued that the county did not have legal standing to bring an action on behalf of the public to acquire a road by prescription. The Supreme Court held that the general powers granted to counties must be liberally construed, and in so doing, it was clear that the county could maintain the action. Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990).

Independent Exercise of Eminent Domain Power by Joint Airport Board Member: Plaintiffs argued that 67-10-205(2)(c) mandates that a proceeding for eminent domain may not be brought by a single municipal member of a joint airport board but rather only as a joint action with the other signatories. The Supreme Court found this to be an overly narrow interpretation in light of other statutory authority in Title 67, ch. 10, parts 1 and 2, which empowers municipalities to act either jointly or independently, and under the broad grant of power to cities under this section. By its terms, 67-10-205(2)(c) requires joint action when an eminent domain proceeding is brought pursuant to the authority of the joint airport board; however, it does not preclude action separate and apart from the board. Lake v. Lake County, 233 M 126, 759 P2d 161, 45 St. Rep. 1354 (1988).

County Commission's Approval Power — Solid Waste — Withdrawal of Approval: A county refuse board contracted with an individual to operate a sanitary landfill. Difficulties arose from the failure of the operator to obtain an operator's license. The County Commissioners sued the operator and prevailed. On appeal, the operator questioned the power of the County Commission to withdraw its contract approval and thereby direct the refuse board to terminate the contract. The Supreme Court held that when a Board of County Commissioners was given an express power of approval, such power was to be complemented by the implied power to withhold approval upon a showing of adequate cause. A logical extension of an implied power to withhold approval was an implied power to withdraw approval. Here, the contract required the operator to satisfy state licensing requirements. The refuse board failed to enforce the provision and allowed the landfill to be operated in violation of law. The Department of Health Solid Waste Management Bureau began refusing to lift sanitary restrictions on subdivisions in the area, exposing the County Commissioners to possible liability. The withdrawal of approval of the defendant's contract was an obvious necessity supported by adequate cause and should be considered proper under the circumstances, which virtually eliminated the propriety of the approval. Ryan v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 190 M 273, 620 P2d 1203, 37 St. Rep. 1965 (1980).

Excess Cash Balance to Be Added to Annual Budget Calculations — Establishment of Trust Fund With Excess Prohibited: A city with general government powers that has a cash balance from previously unbudgeted nontax revenue in excess of outstanding unpaid warrants at the close of the preceding fiscal year in any fund must add the cash balance into the all-purpose general fund to be used in calculating the city's annual operating budget and to set future tax levies. The cash may not be placed in a trust fund, such as a 10-year irrevocable trust fund operated by a third-party trustee. 46 A.G. Op. 15 (1996).

Power of Cemetery District Trustees to Sell Headstones and Grave Markers: Consistent with the liberal construction of powers granted to local government units, the board of trustees of a cemetery district may sell headstones and grave markers at the cemetery for use in the cemetery as long as the profits are used in furtherance of the purposes of the cemetery district. 43 A.G. Op. 31 (1989).

Residential Homestead Property — Lien for Welfare Payments Not Allowed: A county may not execute on a lien for welfare payments against residential property owned by welfare recipients when there has been a homestead declaration recorded on the property. 42 A.G. Op. 112 (1988).

Lack of County Authority to Implement Employee Safety Incentive Bonus Program: A county with general government powers has no inherent authority within its statutory system to implement an employee incentive award program whereby county employees are paid bonuses for maintaining accident-free periods in their departments. 42 A.G. Op. 111 (1988).

County Power to Grant Franchises — Interlocal Agreements Not Precluded: Sections 7-3-144, 7-4-2611, 7-5-2129, and this section, as well as applicable case law, imply that a county vested with general government powers may exercise the power to grant franchises. Under 7-11-104, a city-county interlocal franchise agreement is possible. 42 A.G. Op. 87 (1988).

No County Authority to Provide Housing to Low-Income Elderly: A county with general government powers does not have the authority under Art. XI, sec. 4, Mont. Const., or 7-8-2102 to construct or maintain an apartment complex for elderly low-income citizens that does not otherwise constitute a boarding or nursing home under 7-34-2301 and that does not constitute a public building under 7-8-2102. Instead, a county or municipal housing authority should be created under Title 7, ch. 15, parts 21 or 44, to provide such housing. 42 A.G. Op. 20 (1987).

State Authority to Regulate Liquor — No Delegation to Municipalities: The authority granted to the state by the 21st amendment to the U.S. Constitution to regulate the sale of liquor has not been delegated to municipalities with general powers. Therefore, a municipality with general powers may not punish a violation of its obscenity ordinance by suspending or revoking the liquor license of the offender. 41 A.G. Op. 75 (1986).

Separate Tax Levy for Air Pollution Program Not Permitted: The County Commissioners may not impose a separate tax levy to fund local air pollution programs. 41 A.G. Op. 28 (1985).

Counties' Legislative Power: It is indisputable that (1)(b) of this section was designed to eliminate any constitutional bar to the grant of legislative or ordinance-enacting authority to counties possessing only general governmental powers. 40 A.G. Op. 51 (1984).

Motor Vehicle Parking Offenses — Civil Penalty: A city with general government powers may not establish a civil penalty and collection system for motor vehicle parking offenses. 40 A.G. Op. 31 (1984).

County Housing Authority — Implicit Power to Finance Rehabilitation of Private Dwellings: A county housing authority has implicit statutory power to administer the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program for the rehabilitation of privately owned housing, and a general power county government may therefore administer the CDBG program through a county housing authority. This conclusion is reached because the Legislature recognizes the existence of substandard housing in rural as well as urban areas, and the constitution mandates the resolution of reasonable doubts in favor of local government power. 40 A.G. Op. 17 (1983).

General Government Power County — No Power to Finance Rehabilitation of Private Dwellings: A county with general government powers has no inherent authority to administer a program for the rehabilitation of privately owned housing funded under the Community Development Block Grant program since no statutes expressly confer this power on general power county governments. 40 A.G. Op. 17 (1983).

Elected County Official's Salary — Established by County: The Montana Constitution grants the Legislature authority to allow counties to establish the salaries of elected county officials. 38 A.G. Op. 91 (1980).

Town Council to Designate City Judge From Justices of the Peace of Same County: The statutes concerning the selection of a City Judge for a town stand in stark contrast to those concerning cities. Title 7 has no provision that requires the appointment of a City Judge by a town in order to implement it. Therefore, a town is not authorized by 7-4-4103 to appoint a City Judge who is not a Justice of the Peace. Rather, 3-11-205 provides for the appointment by the town council of a Justice of the Peace of the county in which the town is situated to act as City Judge. The 1975 amendment which changed the statute to read, "the justice of the peace so designated may act as a police judge in all cases arising out of a violation of ordinances in which the town is a party" from "... must act ...", simply provides a designated Justice of the Peace with some discretion in the performance of his or her duty as City Judge for a town, where formerly the duty was mandatory. The statute does not authorize the appointment of a City Judge who is not a Justice of the Peace of the county in which the town is situated. The City Judge must be designated by the town council. 38 A.G. Op. 80 (1980).

Joint Self-Insurance Programs: Montana counties may procure insurance separately or jointly and may use a deductible or self-insurance plan. Therefore, it is permissible for counties to enter into a joint self-insurance program. 38 A.G. Op. 75 (1980).

Rural SIDs — Developer's RSID — Thickly Populated: Section 7-12-2102 allows the Board of County Commissioners to create RSIDs to fund improvements on underdeveloped and unoccupied parcels of land, provided the proposed district lies within an area which is "thickly populated". The Commissioners should exercise great care in assuring that the public interest requires creation of a "developer RSID" since the county taxpayers are exposed to potential financial liability should the developer's business judgment prove faulty. 38 A.G. Op. 23 (1979).

Consolidated Offices — Ballot Listing: It is within the discretion of the Board of County Commissioners to designate how consolidated county offices may be listed on the primary and general election ballots. 37 A.G. Op. 141 (1978).

City Licensing of Real Estate Firms: A city may not require real estate firms to obtain business licenses. 37 A.G. Op. 71 (1977).

Section 5. Self-government charters.

Convention Notes

New provision directing legislature to pass laws concerning procedures for local voters to design their own forms of government (self-government charters). The charter provisions concerning structure of local governments would take precedence over general laws on such matters.

Case Notes

Suspension of Firefighters — All Cities Required to Present Charges to City Council for Hearing — Suspension Procedure Not Part of "Structure" of City Government Under Applicable Definitions — Statute Not Superseded by Charter: Elsenpeter, a Billings firefighter, was suspended from duty by the Billings fire chief. The firefighters' union filed a lawsuit in which the union contended that the suspension procedure used by the city was unlawful because the charges against Elsenpeter were not presented to the Billings City Council for hearing pursuant to 7-33-4124. The city contended that the suspension procedure that it used is part of the structure and organization of the city under its charter and that, pursuant to 7-3-701(2) and this section, which allow the structure of a chartered city government to supersede statutory requirements, the city may override the statutory requirements for hearing contained in 7-33-4124 because the definition of "structure" contained in 7-1-4121(24) is the definition that should apply. The Supreme Court held that in as much as the definitions in 7-1-4121 are, by the terms of that section, limited in their application to 7-1-4121 through 7-1-4149, the dictionary definition of "structure" is the definition that applies. Because the dictionary definition of structure was narrower, the Supreme Court held that the disciplinary suspension procedure used by the city was not part of the "structure" of city government. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the statutory procedure contained in 7-33-4124, requiring presentment of the charges to the City Council, was not superseded by the city charter and had to be followed for the purposes of the suspension of Elsenpeter. Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Limitation on Self-Governing Powers: The city of Billings, a self-governing city, adopted an ordinance purporting to supersede all but two sections in Title 7, ch. 33, part 41, relating to municipal fire departments. The firefighters challenged the ordinance. The District Court held that the ordinance was a permissible exercise of a self-government power. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under the shared sovereignty concept contained in the Montana Constitution, local governments with self-governing powers are limited only by express prohibitions in the constitution, state statute, or the local government charter itself. By statute, a local government may not establish standards or requirements which are lower or less stringent than those imposed by state law. The court held that because the ordinance did not contain standards governing several areas it purported to supersede, the ordinance provisions were lower or less stringent than the statutory provisions and therefore invalid. A local government must provide any service required by state law. State law requires every city to have a fire department. Pursuant to Art. XI, sec. 5(3), Mont. Const., the only statutory provisions which a self-governing charter may control over are those establishing executive, legislative, and administrative structure and organization. The ordinance was invalid. Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 214 M 481, 694 P2d 1335, 42 St. Rep. 112 (1985), followed in Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Power to Prohibit Door-to-Door Solicitation: The city of Billings enacted an ordinance declaring uninvited door-to-door solicitation a nuisance punishable as a misdemeanor. It was argued that a state statute regulating itinerant vendors did not empower a city to prohibit their activities, therefore precluding the ordinance. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under the expanded powers of local self-government provided by Montana's 1972 Constitution, a city possessing those powers may exercise any power not prohibited by the Constitution or state statute. A city possessing self-government powers may prohibit uninvited door-to-door solicitation by itinerant vendors, and a licensing statute does not legalize an activity otherwise prohibited. Any statements to the contrary contained in DeLong v. Downes, 175 M 152, 573 P2d 160 (1977), are expressly overruled. Tipco Corp. v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074, 39 St. Rep. 600 (1982).

Attorney General's Opinions

Combination of Legislative and Executive Powers Under Charter County Government: Under 7-3-705, a charter may provide that the executive and administrative functions of the government will be performed by one or more members of the legislative body, which clearly allows the entire legislative body or commission to perform the executive functions. Accordingly, a county charter may provide that the legislative body or commission will perform the executive functions in addition to its legislative duties. The language of the charter determines whether the executive functions are performed by one or all of the members of the legislative body or commission. 46 A.G. Op. 14 (1996).

Section 6. Self-government powers.

Convention Notes

New provision allowing local government units to share powers with the state and to have all powers not specifically denied. At present local governments have only those powers specifically granted.

Case Notes

Self-Government Local Governments Not Prohibited From Adopting No-Smoking Ordinances Affecting Gambling Establishments: Former section 7-1-120 (now repealed) provided: "An establishment that has been granted a permit under Title 23, chapter 5, part 6, for the placement of video gambling machines on the premises is exempt from any local government ordinance that is more restrictive than the provisions of Title 50, chapter 40, part 1", which is the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act of 1979. Under this section, "A local government unit adopting a self-government charter may exercise any power not prohibited by this constitution, law, or charter." To exempt is not to prohibit. A prohibition cuts off the power to act in the first instance. An exemption assumes that there is authority or power to act and grants freedom or immunity from that power. Section 7-1-120 did not effect an express prohibition of self-governing powers. Therefore, it did not preempt any no-smoking ordinances adopted by a self-governing entity. The state argued that it had preempted the area of state-licensed video gambling machines and that city ordinances limiting or prohibiting smoking in buildings open to the public, one ordinance of which expressly applied to premises with state licenses for video gambling machines, were inconsistent with that preemption. Section 7-1-112(5) prohibits a local government with self-government powers from exercising the power to regulate any form of gambling. The cities' clean air ordinances are not an attempt to regulate gambling in contravention of the 7-1-112(5) prohibition; the ordinances regulate clean indoor air, and if that regulation incidentally impacts video gambling machine establishments, that fact does not invalidate the ordinances. The ordinances have incidental impacts on all buildings open to the public. Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Local Development Code Regulating Sale of Alcoholic Beverages Not Preempted by State: Montana's statutory framework for the regulation of alcohol clearly contemplates that cities will impose local zoning that regulates the sale of alcohol. The development code of the city of Red Lodge, a self-governing city, being consistent with and stricter than the state's regulations, was not preempted by state law. Town Pump, Inc. v. Bd. of Adjustment of Red Lodge, 1998 MT 294, 292 M 6, 971 P2d 349, 55 St. Rep. 1205 (1998), overruling State ex rel. Libby v. Haswell, 147 M 492, 414 P2d 652 (1966).

Regulation of Nude Dancing by Municipality: Under the broad regulatory powers of the twenty-first amendment, a municipality with self-government powers may enact an ordinance that regulates nude and seminude dancing. Billings v. Laedeke, 247 M 151, 805 P2d 1348, 48 St. Rep. 133 (1991).

System Development Fees Allowable Form of Financing Future Expansion of City Water and Sewer System: When liberally construed, it is within the power of a self-governing municipality, as well as a reasonable extension of a city's express statutory authority, to implement the collection and accumulation of system development fees to fund a portion of the cost of future expansion of municipal water and sewer systems. The fees are proper as long as they are based on reasonably anticipated future costs of the city and the revenue generated from the fees is used solely to fund facility expansion or to pay for bonds sold for that purpose. Lechner v. Billings, 244 M 195, 797 P2d 191, 47 St. Rep. 1512 (1990).

City Ordinance Requiring Developer Surcharge — Valid Exercise of Self-Governing Power: A city ordinance imposing a 5% surcharge on developers of raw land prior to creation of a special improvement district was a valid exercise of the city's self-governing powers. Diefenderfer v. Billings, 223 M 487, 726 P2d 1362, 43 St. Rep. 1934 (1986).

Tax on Sale of Attorney's Services — Invalid: A city ordinance imposing an annual tax on every lawyer or law firm carrying on the practice of law, calculated on the basis of gross revenue generated from attorney-client relationships, was held to be an unconstitutional sales tax. The tax was beyond the scope of self-government powers and in violation of 7-1-112, since it was not related to any regulatory control measure for the health or welfare of the city but was a tax on the sale of attorneys' services. Brueggemann v. Billings, 221 M 375, 719 P2d 768, 43 St. Rep. 905 (1986).

Adoption of Self-Government Charter — Doctrine of Implied Preemption: Appellant garbage haulers contended that the Legislature preempted the field of garbage regulation by enacting 7-2-4736. Prior to the 1972 Constitution, cities had only those powers expressly given to them by the Legislature, and if the Legislature considered a subject to be a matter of statewide concern, it could enact laws on the subject and preempt local governments from the field. However, Art. XI, sec. 6, Mont. Const., states that a local government which adopts a self-government charter may exercise any power not prohibited by the Constitution, law, or the charter. The city of Billings adopted a self-government charter in 1976, and 7-1-102 allows the city to provide services or perform any functions not expressly prohibited. The Supreme Court held in Tipco Corp., Inc. v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074 (1982), that "the only way the doctrine of pre-emption by the state can co-exist with self-government powers of a municipality is if there is an express prohibition by statute which forbids local governments . . . from acting in a certain area. The doctrine of implied pre-emption, by definition, cannot apply to local governments with self-government powers". Powers specifically denied to local governments are enumerated in 7-1-111 and include the exercise of any power that prohibits the grant or denial of a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Under 69-12-314, garbage haulers are required to get a certificate of public convenience and necessity prior to doing business. The decision by Billings voters that the city should provide garbage services in no way prohibits the grant or denial of a certificate of public necessity. The Supreme Court held that the city was simply exercising its self-government powers to provide a service for its residents and was taxing them for that service. D & F Sanitation Serv. v. Billings, 219 M 437, 713 P2d 977, 43 St. Rep. 74 (1986), overruling Billings v. Weatherwax, 193 M 163, 630 P2d 1216, 38 St. Rep. 1034 (1981).

Limitation on Self-Governing Powers: The city of Billings, a self-governing city, adopted an ordinance purporting to supersede all but two sections in Title 7, ch. 33, part 41, relating to municipal fire departments. The firefighters challenged the ordinance. The District Court held that the ordinance was a permissible exercise of a self-government power. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under the shared sovereignty concept contained in the Montana Constitution, local governments with self-governing powers are limited only by express prohibitions in the constitution, state statute, or the local government charter itself. By statute, a local government may not establish standards or requirements which are lower or less stringent than those imposed by state law. The court held that because the ordinance did not contain standards governing several areas it purported to supersede, the ordinance provisions were lower or less stringent than the statutory provisions and therefore invalid. A local government must provide any service required by state law. State law requires every city to have a fire department. Pursuant to Art. XI, sec. 5(3), Mont. Const., the only statutory provisions which a self-governing charter may control over are those establishing executive, legislative, and administrative structure and organization. The ordinance was invalid. Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 214 M 481, 694 P2d 1335, 42 St. Rep. 112 (1985), followed in Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Unconstitutional Regulation of Attorneys — Regulatory Business License Required — Self-Government Powers Municipality: A business license ordinance enacted by a self-governing municipality requiring licensure of attorneys was declared invalid in respect to the attorneys because provisions of the ordinance provided for regulation of the practice of law contrary to the Supreme Court's authority to regulate the bar as provided in Art. III, sec. 2, Mont. Const. The Supreme Court recognized the universe of powers available to self-governing local governments that are not available to general power local governments, but said that such powers are restricted by the Montana Constitution. Harlen v. Helena, 208 M 45, 676 P2d 191, 41 St. Rep. 162 (1984).

Power to Prohibit Door-to-Door Solicitation: The city of Billings enacted an ordinance declaring uninvited door-to-door solicitation a nuisance punishable as a misdemeanor. It was argued that a state statute regulating itinerant vendors did not empower a city to prohibit their activities, therefore precluding the ordinance. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under the expanded powers of local self-government provided by Montana's 1972 Constitution, a city possessing those powers may exercise any power not prohibited by the Constitution or state statute. A city possessing self-government powers may prohibit uninvited door-to-door solicitation by itinerant vendors, and a licensing statute does not legalize an activity otherwise prohibited. Any statements to the contrary contained in DeLong v. Downes, 175 M 152, 573 P2d 160 (1977), are expressly overruled. Tipco Corp. v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074, 39 St. Rep. 600 (1982).

Powers of Self-Government Charter Counties: Under the 1889 Montana Constitution, legislative control over counties was supreme: counties could exercise only such powers as were expressly granted to them by the state, together with such implied powers as were necessary for the execution of the powers expressly granted. The 1972 Constitution opened to local government units new vistas of shared sovereignty with the state through the adoption of self-government charters. Article XI, sec. 4, Mont. Const., continues to provide that general local government forms have such powers as are expressly provided or implied by law (to be liberally construed), but Art. XI, sec. 6, Mont. Const., provides that a local government unit may act under a self-government charter with its powers uninhibited except by express prohibitions of the Constitution, law, or charter. The broad expanse of shared sovereignty given to self-governing local units is illustrated by 7-1-103 and 7-1-106. Madison County, having a self-governing charter form of local government, may exercise legislative powers it shares with the state. State ex rel. Swart v. Molitor, 190 M 515, 621 P2d 1100, 38 St. Rep. 71 (1981).

Obscenity "Community Standards" — Statewide as Opposed to Local: A municipal corporation does not have power to enact an ordinance relating to obscenity in excess of limits imposed on city ordinances by the Legislature. Constitutionally adequate community standards to establish whether a work is obscene are not local city standards as opposed to statewide standards but statewide standards as opposed to national standards. The court held that in the face of Art. XI, sec. 6, Mont. Const., a city ordinance in conflict with a prohibitive section of state law cannot stand where the state law is constitutionally valid. U.S. Mfg. & Distrib. Corp. v. Great Falls, 169 M 298, 546 P2d 522 (1976).

County Powers Not Inclusive of Legislative Powers — Closing of County Incinerator Considered Administrative Act Not Subject to Initiative and Referendum: Absent a charter granting self-government powers, a county that exercises only general powers is limited to whatever powers that the Legislature expressly or impliedly grants. Even though the Montana Constitution extends initiative and referendum authority to voters of local government entities, that power is limited to the local government's legislative authorization. Beyond basic corporate powers exercised by a Board of County Commissioners, a general government county functions through administrative boards, districts, and commissions created under specific statutory authority. In this case, Park County created an administrative refuse district and subsequently closed the county-owned incinerator. The closing of the incinerator was subject to the powers of initiative and referendum only if it was within the county's legislative jurisdiction. However, the incinerator closing was an administrative rather than legislative act and thus was not subject to initiative and referendum. 50 A.G. Op. 8 (2004).

Authority of City-County Government to Acquire and Operate Electric and Natural Gas Utilities: A consolidated government with self-government powers, such as the city and county of Butte-Silver Bow, has the authority to acquire and operate electric and natural gas utilities both within and outside the boundaries of the local government unit. The Attorney General determined that Butte-Silver Bow was specifically authorized to do so after considering the local government's charter, constitutional ramifications, and whether the exercise of that authority was prohibited by local government law or other statutes applicable to self-government units and was consistent with state provisions in areas affirmatively subjected to state control, as described in 7-1-113. 48 A.G. Op. 14 (2000). See also State ex rel. Swart v. Molitor, 190 M 515, 621 P2d 1100 (1981), D&F Sanitation Serv. v. Billings, 219 M 437, 713 P2d 977 (1986), and Lechner v. Billings, 244 M 195, 797 P2d 191 (1990).

Mandatory Seatbelt Ordinance: Under Montana law and the Montana Constitution, a municipality with self-governing powers may enact a mandatory seatbelt ordinance that provides for a fine or jail sentence for violation of the ordinance as long as the fine or penalty does not exceed $500 and the imprisonment does not exceed 6 months for any one offense, and as long as such an ordinance is not prohibited by the city charter. 41 A.G. Op. 47 (1986).

Self-Government Powers — Professional Licensing — Conflict With State Statutes: The city of Helena, operating under a home rule charter, passed an ordinance requiring a license fee of all city businesses. State statutes that prohibit municipalities from imposing license fees on certain professions did not apply because the statutes were not made specifically applicable to self-government units. Home rule governments have all powers not specifically denied by the Montana Constitution, law, or charter. 39 A.G. Op. 60 (1982).

County Powers — Revenue Funds: Unless a specific mode or manner of action is mandated by statute, counties may contract with individuals or private organizations, including nonprofit service organizations, for the purchase of services or materials the counties are authorized by statute to provide their constituents if the contracts are reasonable and appropriate methods of furnishing services or materials. Counties may use federal revenue-sharing funds to purchase any services or materials they could use county tax revenues to purchase. 37 A.G. Op. 105 (1978).

Self-Government Powers: Under a form of government with local self-government powers, the replacement of former county officers with department supervisors is a legitimate exercise of such local self-government powers. 37 A.G. Op. 68 (1977).

Section 8. Initiative and referendum.

Convention Notes

New provision directing legislature to give residents the power to initiate local ordinances by petition or to petition to vote on ordinances passed by local governments.

Case Notes

Repeal of City Resolution Via Referendum Invalid: Plaintiffs challenged a referendum approved by voters in the city of Whitefish, which repealed a city resolution that authorized the city to enter into an interlocal agreement with the county concerning planning and zoning authority over a 2-mile area around the city, arguing that the resolution was not subject to the right of voter initiative and referendum. The District Court determined that the resolution was an administrative act by the city and was therefore not subject to repeal by referendum. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the guidelines adopted in Whitehall v. Preece, 1998 MT 53, 288 Mont. 55, 956 P.2d 743, to determine whether the action by the city was administrative or legislative in nature and affirmed, concluding that the city's action had significant administrative characteristics, which made it not subject to repeal by referendum. Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442.

Equitable Tolling and Estoppel Inapplicable to Stay Statutory Deadlines for Collecting Petition Signatures: The Flathead County Board of County Commissioners adopted a resolution approving a developer's amendment to the county master plan that would allow the building of a regional shopping mall. Plaintiff organization was then formed to put the resolution to a vote of the qualified county electors through the initiative and referendum process, but plaintiff failed to gather enough valid signatures within the statutory deadlines. During the signature-gathering period, the Flathead County Attorney determined that only qualified electors in the area covered by the master plan, rather than all qualified county electors, could sign the petition and vote on any resulting referendum. Plaintiff filed suit, seeking a writ of mandamus requiring the County Commissioners to proceed with the process or an alternative writ seeking relief through a declaratory judgment. The alternative writ was issued and then quashed and dismissed. Plaintiff contended that equitable tolling should have tolled the statute of limitations on gathering signatures because the County Commissioners were urged to file suit to determine which voters were eligible to sign the petition and vote on the resulting referendum. However, the County Commissioners declined to file suit, so the period to collect signatures was not tolled, and plaintiff's equitable tolling argument failed. Plaintiff also argued that the County Commissioners should be equitably estopped from using the statutory deadlines to defeat the qualified electors' exercise of their petition rights. The estoppel argument also failed because plaintiff failed to prove the first element of estoppel—that the County Commissioners misrepresented a material fact. The elements of neither equitable tolling nor estoppel having been proved, the District Court's quashing of plaintiff's writ of mandamus was affirmed. Let the People Vote v. Flathead County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2005 MT 225, 328 M 361, 120 P3d 385 (2005).

Guidelines for Distinguishing Between Legislative and Administrative Acts of Local Government — Initiative and Referendum Power Reserved for Legislative Acts Only: Beginning with Billings v. Nore, 148 M 96, 417 P2d 458 (1966), the Supreme Court recognized a distinction between legislative acts, which are subject to the powers of initiative and referendum, and administrative or quasi-judicial acts, which are not. Because local governments are empowered by section 4 of this article to exercise legislative, administrative, and other powers, the question arose as to whether 7-5-131 unconstitutionally limits local government referendum power to resolutions and ordinances within the legislative jurisdiction. In order to clarify the distinction between legislative and administrative acts of a local government, the Supreme Court adopted the following guidelines in Wichita v. Kans. Taxpayers Network, 874 P2d 667 (Kans. 1994): (1) An ordinance that makes new law is legislative, while an ordinance that executes an existing law is administrative. Permanency and generality are key features of a legislative ordinance. (2) Acts that declare public purpose and provide ways and means to accomplish that purpose generally may be classified as legislative. Acts that deal with a small segment of an overall policy question generally are administrative. (3) Decisions that require specialized training and experience in municipal government and intimate knowledge of the fiscal and other affairs of a city in order to make a rational choice may properly be characterized as administrative, even though they may also be said to involve the establishment of a policy. (4) No act of a governing body is likely to be solely administrative or legislative, and the operation of the initiative and referendum statute is restricted to measures that are quite clearly and fully legislative and not principally executive or administrative. In the present case, an ordinance that implemented the use of water meters as part of a town's water system improvement plan was an administrative act that was not subject to referendum. The District Court properly declared a referendum challenging the ordinance invalid. The Supreme Court affirmed the constitutionality of 7-5-131. Whitehall v. Preece, 1998 MT 53, 288 M 55, 956 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 219 (1998), followed in Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442, and overruling Chouteau County v. Grossman, 172 M 373, 563 P2d 1125 (1977), and Dieruf v. Bozeman, 173 M 447, 568 P2d 127 (1977), to the extent that those decisions stand for the rule that a local government's act is administrative based solely on a statutory grant of authority.

Rezoning Ordinance Subject to Referendum — No Distinction Between Zoning and Rezoning for Referendum Purposes: A community group filed a petition seeking a referendum to repeal a rezoning ordinance. Plaintiff, the owner of historic land that it wanted to develop, filed a declaratory judgment action against the city, seeking to have the referendum process refused. The community group was allowed to intervene. The motion for summary judgment was denied; the referendum was held; and the voters supported repeal of the ordinance. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly interpreted 7-5-131 to mean that referendum by the people is appropriate for both zoning ordinances and rezoning ordinances. The Supreme Court overruled specific language in prior cases that distinguished between zoning and rezoning ordinances. The Greens at Fort Missoula, LLC v. Missoula, 271 M 398, 897 P2d 1078, 52 St. Rep. 501 (1995).

Resolution Creating Special Improvement District — Not Subject to Referendum: A resolution creating a municipal special improvement district that encompasses less area than the municipal limits is not subject to referendum because the resolution affects only the people within the improvement district rather than the people of the municipality as a whole. The Supreme Court further held that the resolution creating a special improvement district is part of an administrative procedure, not a legislative action subject to referendum. Shelby v. Sandholm, 208 M 77, 676 P2d 178, 41 St. Rep. 186 (1984), distinguished in The Greens at Fort Missoula, LLC v. Missoula, 271 M 398, 897 P2d 1078, 52 St. Rep. 501 (1995).

Powers of Local Government to Regulate Gambling: The Legislature intended to grant only discretionary licensing power to local governments concerning gambling; thus, in response to a petition for initiative, local governmental bodies are without the power under the Montana Card Games Act and the Bingo and Raffles Law to limit or prohibit gambling and the approved forms thereof. DeLong v. Downes, 175 M 152, 573 P2d 160 (1977), overruled in Tipco v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074 (1982).

Administrative Proposal Not Subject to Initiative: In an action to compel a city to submit a proposed ordinance and resolution for a parking lot facility to electors, the Supreme Court held that such a proposal was not subject to initiative or referendum because it was administrative rather than legislative. Dieruf v. Bozeman, 173 M 447, 568 P2d 127 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

What Electors Considered Qualified Voters for County Zoning Initiatives: A zoning regulation is subject to citizen initiative, and nothing in county zoning law limits qualified electors to only voters living in the area affected by the zoning regulations. Thus, in the case of county zoning regulation initiatives effective in all unincorporated areas of a county, all county residents are considered qualified voters, including those residing within incorporated areas of the county. 52 A.G. Op. 6 (2008).

Initiative Inappropriate Process for Alteration of Method of Establishment and Collection of County Solid Waste Management District Service Charges: The initiative process may not be used to amend the resolution creating a county solid waste management district when the district encompasses an area smaller than the entire county and the initiative petition seeks to alter the method of establishing and collecting service charges. Such a proposed action is administrative in character rather than a legislative act subject to initiative or referendum. 45 A.G. Op. 5 (1993).

Scope — No Application to Special Improvement District: The initiative and referendum apply only to matters of general legislation in which all the qualified electors of the city are interested and not to matters of purely local concern, such as the creation of a special improvement district in which only the inhabitants or property owners are interested. 39 A.G. Op. 73 (1982).

Section 9. Voter review of local government.

Convention Notes

New provision. By 1976 the legislature must give local residents the opportunity to vote on whether or not to change their form of government. Laws must be passed requiring local forms of government to be studied and evaluated every ten years. [Note — see compiler's comment.]

1978 Amendment by Referendum: Constitutional Amendment No. 6, proposed by Ch. 70, L. 1977, and approved at the general election held November 7, 1978, in (2) after "require" inserted "an election in each local government to determine whether a local government will undertake" and inserted last two sentences relating to voter approval and election of commission members. Amendment effective July 1, 1979.

Section 2, Ch. 70, L. 1977, further provided: "If not already implemented, the legislature shall implement this amendment with appropriate legislation in 1979, in order that the electors of each local government may indicate their preference 'For' or 'Against' the establishment of a study commission in 1984." (See text of referendum in final volume of 1979 Laws of Montana.)

Case Notes

Form of Government Unchanged by Recodification: The relevant portions of 7-3-102, et seq., contain the same essential characteristics of form of government as were presented under the former codification. Therefore, constitutional mandates were observed and an alternative and the established (whether called "present" or "existing") forms were presented to the electors for their choice. Schuman v. Study Comm'n of Yellowstone County, 176 M 313, 578 P2d 219 (1978).

Validity of Election — Alternative Form of Government: The findings of fact and conclusions of law of the District Court upholding the validity of city and county alternative form of government elections and proceedings leading thereto were supported by substantial evidence. Schuman v. Study Comm'n of Yellowstone County, 176 M 313, 578 P2d 291 (1978).

Attorney General's Opinions

Mill Levy Question Precluded on Study Commission Ballot: A local governing body is required to conduct a decennial election on the question of local government review and establishment of a study commission. Prior to 1999, under 7-3-184, a local government under study was also required to appropriate an amount necessary to conduct the study and local governments were allowed a mill levy to do so. However, the 1999 Legislature eliminated a local government's authority to levy for a study commission in favor of a generic mill levy election procedure. Thus, local governments may now choose whether or not to fund study commissions, but any appropriation for that purpose is subject to the mill levy limitations of 15-10-420. The ballot form in 7-3-175 is limited to the single question of establishing a local government study commission, so a local government may not combine a mill levy question with the study commission question. Rather, the mill levy question may be presented pursuant to the general-purpose mill levy election procedure in 15-10-425. 50 A.G. Op. 5 (2004).

Special Election on Alternative Form of Government — Study Commission to Recommend Adoption: Under 7-3-187, a special election on an alternative form of government is scheduled only if the study commission recommends an alternative. Therefore, a local government study commission may not have an alternative form of local government placed on the ballot unless the study commission recommends adoption of the alternative plan. 41 A.G. Op. 56 (1986).

Failure to Adopt Alternate Form of Government: A local government which fails in an election to adopt an alternate form of government in the manner provided by Art. XI, sec. 3 and 9, Mont. Const., is bound by the features of the existing form of government. The provisions of 7-3-201 through 7-3-224 allow voters to adopt a mayor-council structure with either partisan or nonpartisan elections. The procedures for recommending such a change are set forth in 7-3-121 through 7-3-161 and 7-3-171 through 7-3-193. If a nonpartisan election structure is not adopted, local elections must be conducted on a partisan basis after May 2, 1977, under the provisions of 7-3-113. 41 A.G. Op. 37 (1985).

Election Required in 1984 on Whether to Establish Study Commission — Existing Study Committee: The question of conducting local government review and establishing a study commission must appear on the June 1984 primary election ballot pursuant to 7-3-173, notwithstanding any recommendations made by a study committee now reviewing a county government or the placing of its recommendations on the ballot. 40 A.G. Op. 30 (1984).

Tax Exemption for Business Inventory While Taxing Livestock Not Violative of State or Federal Equal Protection Laws: The Supreme Court reversed a lower court decision that held that taxing livestock while exempting business inventories was unconstitutional in that the law denied certain individuals equal protection under the federal and state constitutions. The Supreme Court ruled that a middle tier scrutiny was not required; rather the proper test was a rational basis test to determine if there was a basis for treating inventory and livestock differently. Under the rational basis test, it was clear that the Legislature had acted rationally in applying different classifications, and historically the two properties had been treated differently. Mont. Stockgrowers Ass'n v. St., 238 M 113, 777 P2d 285, 46 St. Rep. 1132 (1989), followed in GBN, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 249 M 261, 815 P2d 595, 48 St. Rep. 715 (1991).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Appointee — Term of Office: In answer to the contention that for more than 40 years the custom has prevailed in the state that when the term of office of an appointed state officer, whose appointment required confirmation by the Senate, expires during the recess of the Senate, the Governor appoints a successor who immediately enters upon his duties without awaiting confirmation, the Supreme Court held that both the Constitution (Art. XVIII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const.) and the act creating the Department of Agriculture, Labor and Industry, providing that the Commissioner of the Department shall be appointed subject to or by and with the consent of the Senate and that the officer shall hold his office for 4 years and until his successor is appointed and has qualified, are controlling over such custom and that the incumbent has a right to hold over until his successor has been so confirmed and has qualified. State ex rel. Nagle v. Stafford, 97 M 275, 34 P2d 372 (1934).

DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Constitutional Provision Regarding Work Day Not Applicable to Firefighters Under Collective Bargaining Agreement: The provision in Art. XII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that guarantees an 8-hour workday is not self-executing in that the permissive language in the section allows the Legislature to change the maximum period of 8 hours for certain professions, such as firefighters working pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. Thus, firefighters in this case ineffectively argued that the constitutional guarantee applied when their collective bargaining agreement was for a 27-day work cycle that included working 24-hour shifts and sometimes more than 40 hours a week. Kuhr v. Billings, 2007 MT 201, 338 M 402, 168 P3d 615 (2007).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Overtime Compensation: The cause of action having arisen prior to the adoption of the 1972 Montana Constitution, the Supreme Court noted that under Art. XVIII, sec. 4 and 5, 1889 Mont.

Const., and under 39-4-107, there is no right to receive overtime compensation on the part of the appellant. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150 (1980).

Eight-Hour Workday — Coordination With Federal Fair Labor Standards Act: Although the Fair Labor Standards Act does not define "workweek" for the purpose of determining the amount of overtime owed to an employee, under Art. XVIII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., and 39-4-107, the amount of hourly wage is to be computed on the basis of a 40-hour workweek. Glick v. Dept. of Institutions, 162 M 82, 509 P2d 1 (1973).

Underground Travel Time Included Within Eight-Hour Limitation: In holding that underground travel by iron ore miners to and from the "working face" of the mines constitutes work, upon the facts of this case as found by both courts below, the court cites Art. XVIII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., 39-4-103, providing for 8 hours of work per day in underground mines, and the Montana Supreme Court decision in Butte Miners' Union No. 1 v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 112 M 418, 118 P2d 148 (1941), construing Art. XVIII, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., and 39-4-103, supra, to include all travel time. Attorney General's Opinions

Pay for Holidays — 10-Hour Days — Collective Bargaining for County Employees: A county may collectively bargain that public employees who work 10-hour days for 4 days per week are to be paid for 10 hours on holidays that fall on their regularly scheduled workday. 53 A.G. Op. 4 (2010).

Coal Company Not Subject to Criminal Prosecution for Scheduling Workdays in Excess of Eight Hours: Criminal penalties for hours worked in excess of 8 hours in any day have been repealed by implication through the adoption of Montana's overtime compensation laws. Therefore, a company engaged in the strip mining of coal is not subject to criminal prosecution under 39-4-104 for scheduling its employees for a workweek consisting of 4 10-hour days. 45 A.G. Op. 21 (1994), following 39 A.G. Op. 35 (1981).

Holiday Pay Applicable to County Road Employees Who Work Ten-Hour Days: County road and bridge department employees regularly working 10-hour days 4 days a week are entitled to 8 hours' pay under 2-18-603 for all nonworked holidays. 43 A.G. Op. 14 (1989).

Hours of Labor and Compensation — Overtime: An agency of state government may permit an employee to work more than 8 hours in any workday, but overtime need only be paid for hours worked in excess of 40 hours in any one workweek, and paid days off for annual leave, legal holidays, jury duty, and military leave are not counted as hours worked in computing weekly overtime. 37 A.G. Op. 16 (1977).

Section 3. Institutions and assistance.

Convention Notes

(1) No change except in grammar. (Deletes references to specific types of institutions.) (2) New provision that a person in an institution may exercise all rights except those that are impossible because of the confinement and that all rights are automatically restored when the person is released. (3) Revises 1889 constitution which states that the "several counties" must provide welfare. Revision leaves it up to the legislature to determine whether the state, county or a combination of the two must provide welfare.

1988 Amendment by Referendum: Constitutional Amendment No. 18, proposed by Ch. 343, L. 1987, and approved at the general election held November 8, 1988, in (3) substituted "may" for "shall", after "services" deleted "as may be necessary", after "those" deleted "inhabitants", and at end substituted "are determined by the legislature to be in need" for "may have need for the aid of society"; and inserted (4) authorizing legislative establishment of criteria for eligibility and duration and level of benefits and services. Amendment effective January 1, 1989. (See text of referendum in final volume of 1989 Laws of Montana.)

Preamble: The preamble to Const. Amend. No. 18, approved Nov. 8, 1988, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature historically has prescribed the public policy governing the provisions of economic assistance and social and rehabilitation services to those is need; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature is the appropriate body of state government to determine the needs of its residents; and

WHEREAS, THE Montana Supreme Court, in a recent decision, determined that the Montana Constitution requires that statutes relating to such assistance and services are reviewable under a heightened scrutiny test; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that it is in the public interest to restore to the Legislature the power to prescribe the provision of economic assistance and social and rehabilitation services to those in need, subject to review under the rational basis test.

THEREFORE, it is the intent of the Legislature to refer this constitutional amendment to the people of the state in order to restore the historical power of the Legislature to set eligibility level criteria for programs and services, as well as for the duration and level of benefits and services relating to economic assistance and social and rehabilitation services."

Case Notes

Constitutionality of Statute Governing Community Placement of Developmentally Disabled Individuals: Respondent attacked the constitutionality of 53-20-132 on grounds that District Courts are statutorily not allowed to directly place individuals within community services following expiration of involuntary commitments, in violation of individuals' right of access to courts. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, the Legislature has enacted a statutory scheme, of which 53-20-132 is a part, that designates the forms of available public assistance and that the scheme provides community-based services to the disabled through the administrative process as opposed to a direct judicial order. However, the preference for community placement over institutionalization does not create an absolute right to community placement, nor does 53-20-132 preclude a person who is denied services through the administrative process from administrative appeal or judicial review. Respondent's constitutional challenge failed to recognize that the statute is only one part of the statutory scheme, and given respondent's overly narrow focus, the court concluded that 53-20-132 is facially constitutional. In re T.W., 2005 MT 340, 330 M 84, 126 P3d 491 (2005), followed in In re R.E.A., 2006 MT 12, 330 M 392, 127 P3d 517 (2006).

Limitation on Entitlement to Uninsured Employers' Fund Benefits Not Equal Protection Violation or Restriction on Access to Courts: Zempel was injured while working for an enrolled tribal member on a reservation. Although the tribe carried insurance covering tribal members, Zempel's employer was not covered by workers' compensation insurance, nor was Zempel an enrolled tribal member. Zempel sought benefits from the tribe's insurer through tribal court, but it was determined that the employer was not required to carry insurance. Zempel then sought benefits under the uninsured employers' fund, but the claim was denied because the employer was not an uninsured employer as defined in 39-71-501. Zempel appealed on the grounds that 39-71-501 deprived him of equal protection and violated his constitutional right of access to courts. However, equal protection does not require that all persons be treated alike regardless of whether their circumstances are the same but only that all persons be treated alike under like circumstances. Only injured employees of employers meeting the definition of uninsured employer contained in 39-71-501 are entitled to the substitute workers' compensation benefits that the uninsured employers' fund was created to provide to injured employees of employers who have failed to properly comply with the law. The limitation on entitlement to uninsured employers' fund benefits bears a reasonable relationship to the purpose of that law because it is only those employers subject to the law in the first place upon whom the state can impose the reimbursement and penalty obligations that provide the source of the uninsured employers' fund benefits. Applying the rational basis test, the Supreme Court found no constitutional violation under 39-71-501 on either issue because Zempel failed to meet the burden of establishing the invalidity of the statute. Zempel was not precluded from pursuing other remedies outside the Workers' Compensation Act. The Supreme Court offered a further observation that when Montana citizens avail themselves of jobs on Indian reservations, they agree to abide by tribal rules. Zempel v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 282 M 424, 938 P2d 658, 54 St. Rep. 415 (1997).

Sufficiency of Title of 1988 Welfare Referendum — Applicable Standard: The title of a referendum "allowing the legislature greater discretion to determine the eligibility, duration, and level of economic assistance and social services to those in need" was found by the Supreme Court to be legally sufficient after applying the constitutional requirement of clarity of title set out in Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., and employing the rules of construction developed under State ex rel. Wenzel v. Murray, 178 M 441, 585 P2d 633 (1978), and St. v. McKinney, 29 M 375, 74 P 1095 (1904). The court refused to intervene to remove the referendum from the ballot prior to a vote of the people so as not to violate the constitutional rights of popular sovereignty and self-government. Recognizing important distinctions between the processes of referendum and initiative, the standard applied to the referendum was the same applied to examination of the title of other products of the Legislature. The court affirmed the District Court finding of no statutory authority for preelection nullification of a legislative referendum and noted a strong presumption in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments. The ballot language was not purposely misleading and sufficiently identified the measure to provide for an informed vote. Harper v. Greely, 234 M 259, 763 P2d 650, 45 St. Rep. 1889 (1988), distinguishing State ex rel. Steen v. Murray, 144 M 61, 394 P2d 761 (1964), and State ex rel. Harper v. Waltermire, 213 M 425, 691 P2d 826, 41 St. Rep. 2212 (1984). See also State ex rel. Boese v. Waltermire, 224 M 230, 730 P2d 375, 43 St. Rep. 2156 (1986), and T&W Chevrolet v. Darvial, 196 M 287, 641 P2d 1368 (1982).

Limitation of Assistance Not to Be Arbitrary Between Classes of Eligible Individuals: The state may legitimately limit its expenditures for public assistance, public education, or any other program evenhandedly applied. It may not limit its expenditures by the expedient of eliminating classes of eligible individuals from public assistance without regard to their constitutionally grounded right to society's aid when needed for the basic necessities of life. While not declaring that inhabitants have a constitutional right to public assistance, the Supreme Court did declare that the Legislature, in performing its duties under Art. XII, sec. 3, Mont. Const., may not act arbitrarily between classes of entitled persons. Butte Community Union v. Lewis, 229 M 212, 745 P2d 1128, 44 St. Rep. 1911 (1987). (See 1988 amendment.)

Eligibility — Date Determined: Petroleum County denied medical assistance benefits to unemployed applicant because his unemployment compensation exceeded the county income limitation. The county failed to reduce the applicant's income by the amount of the medical expenses as allowed for in the "spend-down" provision in the county plan. On judicial review before the District Court, the court remanded the case to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) to determine if the applicant was medically indigent. The Department responded that it was without authority to consider the matter further because the applicant at that time had a new job which placed the applicant above the statutory income limitation. The District Court entered a final judgment affirming the denial of benefits. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the statutory and county income limitations but held that the Department had used the wrong income in considering the applicant's need on remand from the District Court. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether the applicant was medically needy under 53-3-103 (substantially reenacted as 53-3-206) at the time medical treatment first began. Deaconess Medical Center of Billings, Inc. v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 222 M 127, 720 P2d 1165, 43 St. Rep. 1112 (1986).

Medical Assistance — Income Limitations Constitutional: Provision in 53-3-103(3), MCA (1983) (substantively reenacted as 53-3-206), that denies medical assistance benefits to those with incomes in excess of 300% of the AFDC standard passes middle-tier scrutiny and is constitutional. The limitation is reasonable, and the state's interest in limiting medical assistance outweighs the interest in obtaining benefits by those whose incomes exceed the limitation. Much lower income limitation in the county plan with a "spend-down" provision, allowing medical expenses to be deducted from the income before comparison with the AFDC standard, is also constitutional. Denial of medical benefits solely because the applicant's income exceeds the AFDC standard would be unconstitutional. Deaconess Medical Center of Billings, Inc. v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 222 M 127, 720 P2d 1165, 43 St. Rep. 1112 (1986).

Restriction of Welfare Benefits Based on Age — Constitutionality — Middle-Tier Test — Equal Protection Analysis: Although a right to welfare is not contained in the Declaration of Rights of the Montana Constitution, Art. XII, sec. 3(3), directs the Legislature to provide necessary assistance to the misfortunate. The Supreme Court held that a benefit lodged in the Montana Constitution is an interest whose abridgment requires something more than a rational relationship to a governmental objective and that a classification which abridges welfare benefits is subject to a heightened scrutiny under an equal protection analysis. The court developed its own middle-tier test for determining the constitutionality of HB 843 (Ch. 670, L. 1985), a bill which restricted or denied general assistance benefits to able-bodied persons under the age of 50 who do not have minor dependent children. The court held that a finding that HB 843 is constitutional required the state to demonstrate two factors: (1) that its classification of welfare recipients on the basis of age was reasonable; and (2) that state interest in such classification was more important than the people's interest in obtaining welfare benefits. The state failed to show that misfortunate people under age 50 are more capable of surviving without assistance than people over age 50 or that broad generalizations based on age are reasonable rather than arbitrary. Also, the trial record did not show the state to be in such a financially unsound position that the welfare benefit, granted constitutionally, could be abrogated. Therefore, the Supreme Court found unconstitutional the provisions of HB 843 which denied or restricted welfare benefits based on age. Butte Community Union v. Lewis, 219 M 426, 712 P2d 1309, 43 St. Rep. 65 (1986). (See 1988 amendment.)

Right to Welfare — Not Fundamental Right: The District Court held that Art. XII, sec. 3(3), Mont. Const., established a fundamental right to welfare for the aged, infirm, or misfortunate. The Supreme Court found that in order to be fundamental, a right must be found within the Declaration of Rights in the Montana Constitution or be a right "without which other constitutionally guaranteed rights would have little meaning" (quoting In re C.H., 210 M 184, 683 P2d 931, 41 St. Rep. 997 (1984)). Article XII, sec. 3, is not part of the Declaration of Rights; Art. II, sec. 3, is the only section in the Declaration of Rights which could arguably create a right to welfare. The official committee comment to Art. II, sec. 3, states: "The intent . . . is not to create a substantive right for all the necessities of life to be provided by the public treasury" (vol. II, p. 627, 1972 Con. Con. Committee Reports). The Supreme Court further found that the right to welfare is not a right upon which constitutionally guaranteed rights depend. Therefore, since neither of the above conditions were met, the right to welfare was held not to be a fundamental right under the Montana Constitution. Butte Community Union v. Lewis, 219 M 426, 712 P2d 1309, 43 St. Rep. 65 (1986).

Implementation — Community Homes for Persons With Developmental Disabilities: The Montana Legislature, pursuant to this constitutional mandate, has enacted Title 53, ch. 20, part 3, to provide for the needs of persons with developmental disabilities at "community homes" rather than in institutions to the extent possible. State ex rel. Child & Family Serv., Inc. v. District Court, 187 M 126, 609 P2d 245 (1980).

Community Homes — Effect of City Zoning Laws: When the Legislature determines that the constitutional rights of persons with developmental disabilities are to live and develop within community structure as a family unit, rather than be segregated in isolated institutions, city zoning regulations should be revised to meet legislative requirements, as a city has no power except as conferred by legislative grants which the legislative branch may modify or withdraw at its pleasure. State ex rel. Thelen v. Missoula, 168 M 375, 543 P2d 173 (1975).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Statutory Implementation Required: Although Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., placed the burden of providing for the aged, infirm, and unfortunate upon the counties, in order for the county to be obligated to pay general relief assistance, there must be specific statutory law so directing. Pease v. Hansen, 159 M 43, 494 P2d 925 (1972).

Unreasonable Standard as Applied: Where family of 10 had earnings in excess of county welfare board's standard minimum income for determining indigency, application of the standard to deny medical assistance became unreasonable where the family had considerable medical expense and a history of indebtedness. St. Patrick Hosp. v. Powell County, 156 M 153, 477 P2d 340 (1970).

Proof of Indigency: Under constitutional provision defining indigency and statute imposing duty upon county to pay for medical aid rendered indigents, fact that supposed indigent had never supported herself and apparently never would was proof of medical indigency in spite of the fact that she was employable and notwithstanding absence of evidence of reasons for her inability to be a productive citizen. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Lewis & Clark County, 149 M 206, 425 P2d 316 (1967).

Armories Not State Institutions: Sections (now repealed) creating the Armory Board did not make armories institutions to be supported by the state under Art. X, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., since that constitutional provision related only to institutions, title to which is held by the state, whereas under the statutes title is held by a public corporation separate from the state. Geboski v. Armory Bd., 110 M 487, 103 P2d 679 (1940).

Aid of Society — Cooperation of State and Federal Governments: The duty of caring for the poor is primarily an obligation of the counties, but federal and state governments may cooperate with the counties in discharging the obligation. State ex rel. Barr v. District Court, 108 M 433, 91 P2d 399 (1939).

Aid of Society — State May Determine How Care Provided: The mandate of Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., that counties shall provide for their poor "as may be prescribed by law", meant as may be prescribed by act of the Legislature. Legislative control over counties is supreme, except as restricted by the Constitution, and while the duty to care for the poor is primarily an obligation of the counties under Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., the state may offer cooperation and assistance. The Legislature has the right to enact provisions, binding upon the counties, as to how they shall care for their poor, even though such action may amount to dictation to them concerning expenditures of their own funds. State ex rel. Wilson v. Weir, 106 M 526, 79 P2d 305 (1938).

Aid of Society — Legislative Power: The fact that Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., made it incumbent upon the counties of state to provide for their aged and infirm did not thereby prohibit the Legislature from passing sections resulting in bringing county action about and assisting in the care of the aged and infirm. State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935).

Aid of Society — Use of Income Tax Money: The fact that under Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., it was made the duty of counties to provide for the support of their indigents did not prohibit the Legislature from making like provision for unfortunates of the state at large. Therefore, directing that 20% of the income tax collected be used for that purpose did not render the income tax law unconstitutional. Mills v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 97 M 13, 33 P2d 563 (1934).

Aid of Society — Broad Construction: The provision of Art. X, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., that the counties of the state shall provide by law for those inhabitants who, by reason of age, infirmity, or misfortune, may have claims upon the sympathy and aid of society, must be given a broad construction consistent with its benevolent purpose. Jones v. Cooney, 81 M 340, 263 P 429 (1928).

Operation of Grain Elevator: There being no constitutional prohibition, the state may, under its police power, lawfully engage in the business of operating a grain elevator or in other similar business for the benefit of the public. State ex rel. Lyman v. Stewart, 58 M 1, 190 P 129 (1920), distinguished in Stoner v. Timmons, 59 M 158, 196 P 520 (1921).

Retroactivity of New Judicial Rules and Judicial Interpretation — Section 46-23-1012 (1999) Applied Retroactively to Parole Revocations Between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001: On April 26, 2001, the Supreme Court held that a probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. On May 4, 2001, Goebel petitioned the court to look beyond the plain language of 46-23-1012 and hold that the probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender has been arrested by a probation officer rather than pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Effective May 1, 2001, the Legislature amended 46-23-1012 to delete the requirement for a probable cause hearing. On May 9, 2001, Giddings filed a petition for rehearing, asking the court to direct the District Court to dismiss the petition to revoke Giddings' suspended sentence on grounds that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to revoke the suspended sentence because of the amendment to 46-23-1012, contending that application of the new statute would violate the constitutional ban on ex post facto legislation. The Supreme Court declined to modify the decision in either Goebel or Giddings because no material fact or question decisive of the cases themselves was overlooked and the decisions did not conflict with any express statute or controlling decision. However, the court did discuss the retroactive application of judicial rules of criminal procedure and the judicial interpretation of a statute, as well as the claim that the retroactive application of 46-23-1012 was a violation of the ex post facto clause. Citing Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 US 298 (1994), the court held that a court's interpretation of a statute is never new law because the decision declares what the statute meant from the day of its enactment, not from the date of the decision. In determining whether a statute violates the ex post facto clause, the court referred to the test in St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453 (2000), which provided that to be in violation of the clause, a statute must be retrospective and must disadvantage the offender affected by it. In this case, Giddings was not disadvantaged because the statutory change did not alter the definition of or punishment for the probation violation that Giddings was charged with. Further, the error that was the basis for reversal of Giddings' case was jurisdictional, so all proceedings in the District Court were void ab initio, and the state was entitled to proceed anew, following the procedure outlined in the newly amended version of 46-23-1012. The Supreme Court's decisions based on the 1999 version of 46-23-1012 were applicable retroactively to persons whose probation or parole was revoked between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001. Thus, if a person was arrested during that period pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge and was not afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did not have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing, so the state could refile the petition to revoke the person's probation pursuant to the 2001 version of 46-23-1012, as long as the probationer was still under the custody or supervision of the Department of Corrections on May 1, 2001. If the person was afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 155, 306 M 83, 31 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Finley, 2003 MT 239, 317 M 268, 77 P3d 193 (2003).

Beneficial Use Tax on Investor-Owned Power Companies Upheld: The power companies argued that a beneficial use tax was a retroactive law and therefore invalid. The Supreme Court stated that the companies' position ignored the ongoing nature of their business and that only when the measuring formula for the tax draws upon such disparate or long past antecedents so as to have little relation to the volume of the current business will a business tax fail on retroactivity grounds. Pac. Power & Light Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 237 M 77, 773 P2d 1176, 46 St. Rep. 636 (1989).

No Retroactive Application When Amended Statute Applied to Factual Situation Occurring Prior to Amendment: Section 61-8-402 was amended in 1983 to provide for a 1-year revocation of a driver's license upon the holder's refusal to submit to a chemical test within 5 years of a previous refusal. The court held that application of this provision, when the first refusal had occurred prior to the 1983 amendment, was not a retroactive application of law precluded by 1-2-109. Stiffarm v. Furois, 217 M 335, 704 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 1227 (1985).

Retroactive Calculation of Tax — Unconstitutional: Plaintiffs contended that 15-31-114(2)(b)(ii)(C) was unconstitutionally retroactive. Plaintiff, Havre Federal Savings and Loan Association, had incurred a net operating loss in each of the 5 years from 1974 through 1978. The challenged portion of the statute was enacted in 1979. Under 15-31-114(2)(b)(i), plaintiff carried forward its net operating losses and applied them to its 1979 return, which resulted in no net income for that year. The defendant, acting under the authority of the challenged subsection, recalculated plaintiff's net income for the years 1974 through 1978, which resulted in no net operating losses to carry forward. The Supreme Court held that the subsection was retroactive in effect and therefore unconstitutional. The State cannot change a law in 1979 and compel a recalculation of tax returns filed for 1974 through 1978 based on the new law effective for the first time in 1979. First Fed. S & L Ass'n v. Dept. of Revenue, 200 M 358, 654 P2d 496, 39 St. Rep. 1802 (1982).

Substantial Impairment of City's Contractual Obligations — Retrospective Application: On November 25, 1978, a city and a private garbage collection service entered into a contract in which the latter was to provide garbage collection services for the city from November 1, 1978, through June 30, 1979. On June 30, 1979, the city voted to provide its own garbage service. Retroactive application of 7-13-4107, relating to compensation of private garbage carriers, would clearly substantially impair the contractual obligations of the city. Whether it constitutes an unconstitutional impairment of contract was not decided because the contract expired before the effective date of the statute. D & F Sanitation Serv. v. Red Lodge, 196 M 490, 640 P2d 461, 39 St. Rep. 287 (1982).

CORPORATIONS

Corporate Property — Eminent Domain: The requirement of subsection 9 of section 11-602, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), that a portion of platted subdivisions be dedicated to public park purposes is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority to city and county authorities, nor is the enforcement of this requirement a confiscation of private property without compensation or an invalid extension of the police power under Art. XV, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const. Billings Properties, Inc. v. Yellowstone County, 144 M 25, 394 P2d 182 (1964).

Grant of Water Conservation Board Charter: Law was not a special law granting a charter to the Water Conservation Board (now Water Resources Division), in violation of Art. XV, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935).

Legislative Power to Change Law — Excise Tax: Since a domestic corporation accepts its charter upon the express condition that the Legislature may at any time amend or repeal the incorporation act and thus destroy the corporation absolutely, it would seem that the major power to destroy includes the minor power to exact an excise as a condition to the corporation's right to continue business. Mid-Northern Oil Co. v. Walker, 65 M 414, 211 P 353 (1922). See Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

Legislative Power to Change Law — Limitations: The Legislature may alter the charter of an existing corporation by imposing greater burdens thereafter to be assumed by the stockholders than were imposed at the time it was granted. The alteration must not involve a confiscation of the rights of individuals, deprive them of their property without due process of law, or violate the elementary principles of natural justice. Barth v. Pock, 51 M 418, 155 P 282 (1915).

Legislative Power to Change Law — Impairment of Contract Obligations: When a corporation was organized there was not any law under which nonassessable stock could be made assessable. Its certificate of incorporation and every stock certificate issued recited that the stock was nonassessable, and in 1901 the requisite number of shares of stock were voted in favor of making the stock assessable by taking advantage of the provisions authorizing the procedure. The statute in question was not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts. The reserved power of the state allowed it to amend the laws under which a corporation is created. Somerville v. St. Louis Min. & Milling Co., 46 M 268, 127 P 464 (1912).

Legislative Power to Change Law — Adoption of Statute in Charter: When a mining company was organized there existed and was read into and made a part of its charter the then-existing statute which gave notice to all concerned that the Legislature, acting under Art. XV, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., might at any time alter, amend, or repeal the law under which it existed. Allen v. Ajax Min. Co., 30 M 490, 77 P 47 (1904). See Somerville v. St. Louis Min. & Milling Co., 46 M 268, 127 P 464 (1912).

Curative Statute: The purpose of section 1034 of the Civil Code of 1895, providing that "any foreign corporation that has heretofore engaged in business, performed acts, or made contracts in this state, may, within ninety days from the date this act goes into effect, comply with the provisions hereof, and thereupon all its acts and contracts done and made before this act goes into effect shall be valid and enforceable, any statute of this state heretofore enacted to the contrary notwithstanding," being merely to make valid and enforceable contracts made by foreign corporations which were voidable because of a failure to file certain statements and certificates by law required and not referring to or making valid contracts of such corporations which are void for other reasons, is not in conflict with Art XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. The section of the code in question is a curative statute and not retrospective in its operation, as it does not interfere with any vested right or impair the obligation of any contract. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Winne, 20 M 20, 49 P 446 (1897).

RETROSPECTIVE LAWS

Retrospective Laws — Lease of State Lands: The law authorizing the lease of state lands for underground storage of natural gas did not violate Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Hughes v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 137 M 510, 353 P2d 331 (1960).

Extension of Grazing Leases: The Supreme Court held that Ch. 61, L. 1935 (omitted), providing for extension of leases of state grazing lands for additional period of 3 years at option of lessees, was not retrospective in the sense prohibited by Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., and if creating new liability on passed transaction, this section protects only a county or municipal subdivision of state and not state itself. Leuthold v. Brandjord, 100 M 96, 47 P2d 41 (1935).

No Retroactivity Unless Express: Chapter 37, L. 1919 (section 15-407, R.C.M. 1947, now repealed), in relieving directors of a corporation of the penalty imposed by section 3837, Revised Codes of 1907, held not objectionable as in contravention of Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the passing of laws for the benefit of a corporation or an individual, retrospective in its operation or violative of 1-2-109, in providing that no law is retroactive unless expressly so declared. Cont. Oil Co. v. Mont. Concrete Co., 63 M 223, 207 P 116 (1922), overruled on other grounds in Cont. Supply Co. v. Abell, 95 M 148, 24 P2d 133 (1933).

Escheated Property: Chapter 132, L. 1913 (section 91-518, R.C.M. 1947, not codified in the MCA), providing for the recovery of escheated property, is not retrospective within the meaning of that term as used in Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. In re Pomeroy, 51 M 119, 151 P 33 (1915).

"Retrospective in Operation": A statute which provides for the payment of advances to a school district for the erection of school buildings in reliance upon a bond issue declared invalid by the subsequent issue of bonds is not retrospective in operation under Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Dickerman, 16 M 278, 40 P 698 (1895).

NEW LIABILITY

Special Taxes — Funding Bonds: Chapter 199, L. 1939 (39-4-111), authorizing County Commissioners to provide for the payment of floating indebtedness by levying of special taxes or the issuance of funding bonds to pay such indebtedness when the same exceeds a certain amount, held not in violation of Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., as imposing on the people of the city a new liability in respect to transactions already passed. State ex rel. Siegfriedt v. Carbon County, 108 M 510, 92 P2d 301 (1939).

Liability Assumption — Option to Public: A legislative act which extends an option to the people of a municipal subdivision of the state under which by a vote of the taxpayers they may decide for or against assuming a liability in respect to a past transaction does not offend against Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting the Assembly from passing any law for the benefit of a corporation or individuals imposing upon them a new liability for a past transaction. Stanley v. Jeffries, 86 M 114, 284 P 134 (1929).

Inhibition Not Applicable to State: While the state was forbidden by Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., from imposing upon its municipal subdivisions a liability in respect to a transaction or consideration already passed, it could impose such a liability upon itself. In re Pomeroy, 51 M 119, 151 P 333 (1915).

Water Supply — Private Contract: As applied to municipalities having contracts with private persons for water supply at the time of the enactment of the statute, subdivision 64 of section 4800 of the Political Code of 1895 (section 5639, R.C.M. 1935, omitted), providing that no municipality having a water supply furnished by private persons shall erect any water plant to be operated by itself, but that if it desires to acquire such a plant, it shall purchase or condemn such supply, is in violation of Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. Helena Consol. Water Co. v. Steele, 20 M 1, 49 P 382 (1897).

PROTECTION OF THE PUBLIC

Police Power — Unrelated: The activity proscribed by Art. XV, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const., had no relation to police power. Mont. Milk Control Bd. v. Rehberg, 141 M 149, 376 P2d 508 (1962).

Monopolies: Article XV, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const., was not only aimed at monopolies but also invalidated all price-fixing contracts, even in situations where there was open competition and no danger of monopoly. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. Skaggs Drug Center, Inc., 139 M 15, 359 P2d 644 (1961).

Prohibition Against Price Fixing on Production Regulation: The Fair Trade Act (now repealed) permitted price fixing in violation of Art. XV, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const., and was therefore invalid. Union Carbide & Carbon Crop. v. Skaggs Drug Center, Inc., 139 M 15, 359 P2d 644 (1961), distinguished in Mont. Milk Control Bd. v. Rehberg, 141 M 149, 376 P2d 508 (1962).

Cumulative Voting — Assenting Stockholders: Under Art. XV, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., stockholders could contract among themselves with respect to voting their stock, and a contract to refrain from cumulative voting was valid. However, an invalid bylaw that attempted to dispense with cumulative voting was not enforceable as a contract, even among those stockholders assenting to it. Under Art. XV, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., a corporation could not deprive a stockholder of the right of cumulative voting by any act on its part. Sensabaugh v. Polson Plywood Co., 135 M 562, 342 P2d 1064 (1959).

Diseased Animals — Preservation of Health: Under the guise of police power the state and municipal subdivisions thereof have the power and the duty to do all things necessary to protect the public in matters of the preservation, among other things, of the health and well-being of the community. Under police power the state can provide for the destruction of diseased animals even though provision for compensation to the owner has not been made. Ruona v. Billings, 136 M 554, 323 P2d 29 (1958).

Public Utilities Act: Held, that the public utilities act empowering the commission thereby created, among other things, to fix not only maximum but also minimum or precise rates does not prevent competition or offend against the provisions of Art. XV, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const., prohibiting every form of combination or contract for the purpose of fixing the price of any article of commerce for consumption by the people, the purpose of the act being to determine a price which shall be just and reasonable to all concerned, while the purpose of the constitutional provision is to prohibit combinations or contracts having for their object a taking advantage of the public in an unlawful way. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

Corporate Liability for Damages Sustained by Employee: Laws relative to the liability of railway corporations for damages sustained by an employee by reason of the negligence of his coemployees are a valid exercise of legislative power under this section. Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

Trusts — Price Fixing: Section 321 of the Penal Code of 1895 (now repealed), prohibiting the formation of combinations or trusts for the purpose of fixing the price or regulating the production of articles of commerce, and section 325 of the same code (now repealed), to the effect that such prohibition shall not apply to persons engaged in agriculture and horticulture, are dependent upon each other and void. These provisions are the result of an effort to carry out the mandate of Art. XV, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const. St. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 33 M 179, 82 P 833 (1905).

Remission of Interest: Chapter 88, L. 1935 (omitted), authorizing remission of interest and penalties held not violative of Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Sparling v. Hitsman, 99 M 521, 44 P2d 747 (1935).

Tax Deposit: Held, under this case, and in view of the fact that the statutory proceedings for a sale of property for delinquent taxes are primarily designed as a means for collecting the tax against it, Ch. 85, L. 1927 (15-18-401, 15-18-402, 15-18-403, all three sections now repealed), requiring a deposit of taxes, etc., preliminary to action to set aside a tax deed, may not be held invalid under Art. XV, sec. 13, 1889 Mont. Const., as destructive of vested rights, in that it imposes obligations with respect to a past transaction which were not required at the time the property was sold for taxes. State ex rel. Souders v. District Court, 92 M 272, 12 P2d 852 (1932).

Irrigation Districts: The statutes (section 4024, R.C.M. 1921, since repealed, and 85-7-2201) curing defects in the creation of irrigation districts, held not open to constitutional objections based on the provisions of Art. XV, sec. 13, Art. III, sec. 27, Art. V, sec. 23, and Art. VIII, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const., or the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States. State ex rel. Malott v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 86 M 595, 285 P 932 (1930).

Section 2. Consumer counsel.

Convention Notes

New provision requiring legislature to create a state office to represent customers at hearings before the public service commission. Utility companies would be taxed to support the office.

Case Notes

Suspension Period — Effect on Public Participation: The resultant effect of the 180-day period of suspension in 69-12-505 is not to deprive the Consumer Counsel or any other interested member of the public a vehicle for challenging the reasonableness of a motor carrier's proposed intrastate rate increase. State ex rel. Chem. Trans. v. Bollinger, 173 M 535, 568 P2d 172 (1977).

Section 4. Code of ethics.

Convention Notes

New provision. The legislature must enact laws concerning conflict of interest involving legislators and other public officials.

Case Notes

State Auditor as Member of Hail Board — No Conflict of Interest: The State Auditor as ex officio Commissioner of Insurance is required to approve the form of all hail insurance policies issued in Montana and at the same time is required by law to sit as a member of the Board of Hail Insurance (Hail Board). The State Auditor is not compensated for service on the Hail Board, nor is there any compensation from any source for such duties. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the State Auditor as ex officio Commissioner of Insurance is not financially interested in the Hail Board within the meaning of 2-2-102. Mtn. States Ins. Co. v. St., 218 M 365, 708 P2d 564, 42 St. Rep. 1657 (1985).

Attorney General's Opinions

Acceptance of Severance Pay by Public Service Commissioner Not Breach of Ethics: Severance pay negotiated as part of a negotiated union contract agreement and supported by consideration, such as surrender of accrued seniority and entitlement to reemployment, does not constitute a gift within the meaning of 2-2-104, nor does the termination of employment and acceptance of severance pay constitute a substantial financial transaction for private business purposes within the meaning of 2-2-121. Therefore, a Public Service Commissioner did not violate the code of ethics for public officials and employees by temporarily reactivating and then terminating his employment with a railroad company in order to become eligible to receive severance pay negotiated between the railroad and the collective bargaining unit to which the Commissioner belonged. Notice to the other Commissioners was adequate to meet the terms of 2-2-121(2)(f). The action did not constitute the kind of private relationship contemplated by the code of ethics that would threaten the integrity of the position because the situation presented no opportunity to use the influence of the official position to further personal gain. 45 A.G. Op. 10 (1993).

Section 5. Exemption laws.

DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Bankruptcy Exemption for Health Savings Accounts — Recent Legislation: The Bankruptcy Court sent a certified question to the Supreme Court asking whether a debtor may claim an exemption in a health savings account pursuant to 25-13-608. The Supreme Court held that Montana applies a principle of liberal construction as it relates to bankruptcy exemptions, that the nature of a health savings account qualified as a benefit under 25-13-608, that the statute explicitly provided that medical, surgical, or hospital benefits are exempt, and that certain funds in a health savings account are exempt. The court then noted that the Montana Legislature subsequently exempted certain health or medical savings accounts through Ch. 298, L. 2017, consistent with their opinion. In re Giacometto, 2017 MT 162, 388 Mont. 82, 397 P.3d 1264.

Inherited IRAs Not Exempt From Bankruptcy Estate: Although Montana exemption laws are intended to be liberally construed, the construction cannot disregard the plain language of a statute. As a result, a debtor may not claim an exemption in an inherited IRA from a bankruptcy estate pursuant to 25-13-608. In re Golz, 2015 MT 318, 381 Mont. 385, 360 P.3d 1142.

Four-Wheel All-Terrain Vehicle Not a Sporting Good: On a certified question from federal Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court concluded that under state law, debtors may not claim a four-wheel all-terrain vehicle (ATV) as an exempted sporting good under 25-13-609(1). Rather, an ATV falls within the motor vehicle exemption provided in 25-13-609(2). In re Holzapfel, 2011 MT 257, 362 Mont. 251, 262 P.3d 1114.

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Exemption — Waiver: Article XIX, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., established public policy in favor of liberal exemption laws, and the enforcement of a clause in an executory contract waiving statutory exemptions is against public policy, even without a statute expressly invalidating such waivers. Credit Union v. West, 157 M 175, 483 P2d 909 (1971).

Exemptions — Liberal Construction:

Exemption statutes have a humanitarian purpose, and their provisions must be liberally construed. De Fontenay v. Childs, 93 M 480, 19 P2d 650 (1933); Oreg. Mtg. Co. v. Dunbar, 87 M 603, 289 P 559 (1930); Esterly v. Broadway Garage Co., 87 M 64, 285 P 172 (1930).

Sections, relating to exempt property of debtors, were enacted in obedience to the injunction contained in Art. XIX, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., and must be liberally construed. Mennell v. Wells, 51 M 141, 149 P 954 (1915).

The laws enacted under Art. XIX, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., must receive a liberal construction in favor of the debtor. Dayton v. Ewart, 28 M 153, 72 P 420 (1903); Ferguson v. Speith, 13 M 487, 34 P 1020 (1893).

Exemption — Mode, Amount, and Character Left to Legislature: The mode of obtaining the exemption and the amount and character of it are left for the Legislature to provide. Yerrick v. Higgins, 22 M 502, 57 P 95 (1899).

Hotel Not Charitable Purpose: The erection and maintenance of a hotel as a memorial to executrix was not a charitable purpose, and therefore such provision in will was not exempt from the rule against perpetuities. In re Swayze's Estate, 120 M 546, 191 P2d 322 (1948).

Water Marketing Agreement: Contract between the Water Conservation Board (now Water Resources Division) and a water users' association and individuals relating to a water marketing agreement did not offend against Art. XIX, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Normile v. Cooney, 100 M 391, 47 P2d 637 (1935).

Case Notes

Prohibition on Same-Sex Marriage Unconstitutional: Under the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution, same-sex couples have a fundamental right to marry. A state is required to license a marriage between same-sex couples and to recognize a same-sex marriage validly performed out of state. A state law that provides otherwise is unconstitutional. Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 US __, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015).

Same-Sex Couples Seeking Declaratory and Injunctive Relief for Rights Afforded Married Couples — Relief Exceeds Bounds of Justiciable Controversy — Remanded to Allow Plaintiffs to Amend Complaint: Six same-sex couples filed suit against the state seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in order to receive protections and benefits equal to those provided to married couples under state law. Although they claimed that Montana's statutory scheme denied them several rights under Article II of the Montana Constitution — among them, the rights to equal protection, due process, and dignity — the plaintiffs did not seek a declaration that particular statutes were unconstitutional. The District Court granted the state's motion to dismiss, concluding that the matter exceeded the bounds of a justiciable controversy and that to grant the plaintiffs the broad injunction and declaratory judgment they sought would not terminate the controversy giving rise to the proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal but remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint to identify the statutes they claim violate their constitutional rights. Donaldson v. St., 2012 MT 288, 367 Mont. 228, 292 P.3d 364.

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Majority of Electors: Under Art. XIX, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., "approval by a majority of the electors voting at the election" meant approval by a majority of a total number of electors casting valid ballots on the question of approval or rejection of a new Constitution and did not refer to or include those electors who failed to express an opinion by a vote on that issue. State ex rel. Cashmore v. Anderson, 160 M 175, 500 P2d 921 (1972), certiorari denied, 410 US 931 (1973).

Voter Education: Article XIX, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., did not grant to a constitutional convention the power to expend public funds for voter education with respect to the convention's proposals. State ex rel. Kvaalen v. Graybill, 159 M 190, 496 P2d 1127 (1972).

Delegates to Convention: Legislators and other officers of the state are ineligible to serve as delegates to a constitutional convention during their term of office. Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 156 M 416, 481 P2d 330 (1971), distinguished in Mahoney v. Murray, 159 M 176, 496 P2d 1120 (1972).

Initiative Measure — Not Amendatory of Constitution: Proposed Initiative Measure No. 63, which would legalize lotteries and repeal 23-5-201 through 23-5-211 (now repealed), could not be considered as an amendment to the Montana Constitution where it did not comply with Art. XIX, sec. 8 or 9, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. Steen v. Murray, 144 M 61, 394 P2d 761 (1964).

Revision and Amendment Distinguished: Section authorizing the consolidation of county and city governments was not an attempted revision under Art. XIX, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., but was an amendment under section 9 thereof. State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Section 2. Initiative for constitutional convention.

Convention Notes

New provision. Enables people to petition to call a constitutional convention.

Section 3. Periodic submission.

Convention Notes

New provision. The question of holding a constitutional convention must be submitted to vote of the people at least once every 20 years.

Section 4. Call of convention.

Convention Notes

Revises 1889 constitution. Legislature shall determine whether constitutional convention delegates be elected on partisan or non-partisan basis. (1889 constitution not explicit on this point. Montana Supreme Court held convention delegates must run on partisan basis.)

Delegates to Convention — Election:

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention must be elected from districts apportioned according to the 1970 census and to be used for the election of legislators in 1972. Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 156 M 416, 481 P2d 330 (1971).

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention must be elected in the same manner as legislators, including the provisions for partisan elections. Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 156 M 416, 481 P2d 330 (1971).

Delegates to Convention — Eligibility of Legislators: Legislators and other officers of the state are ineligible to serve as delegates to a constitutional convention during their term of office. Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 156 M 416, 481 P2d 330 (1971), distinguished in Mahoney v. Murray, 159 M 176, 496 P2d 1120 (1972).

Preelection Challenge to Legislative Referendum — Constitutional Amendments by Statutory Referendum — Justiciable Where Proposed Law Facially Defective: The Legislature passed a bill to put a referendum on the ballot to change elections for Supreme Court justices from statewide to regional. Prior to the election, citizens from each of the seven proposed regions filed an action against the Secretary of State, seeking a declaratory judgment that the proposed referendum was unconstitutional as well as an injunction to bar the Secretary of State from putting the measure on the ballot. The District Court granted the plaintiffs summary judgment and the state appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court that the matter was justiciable even though the voters had not yet passed the referendum. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court concluded that preelection consideration of the appeal was appropriate because the proposed law was facially unconstitutional. The measure sought to amend the Montana Constitution by means of a statutory referendum, in clear violation of constitutional provisions. Therefore, the Supreme Court agreed the matter was justiciable and affirmed the District Court's granting of summary judgment. Reichert v. St., 2012 MT 111, 365 Mont. 92, 278 P.3d 455.

Sufficiency of Title of 1988 Welfare Referendum — Applicable Standard: The title of a referendum "allowing the legislature greater discretion to determine the eligibility, duration, and level of economic assistance and social services to those in need" was found by the Supreme Court to be legally sufficient after applying the constitutional requirement of clarity of title set out in Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., and employing the rules of construction developed under State ex rel. Wenzel v. Murray, 178 M 441, 585 P2d 633 (1978), and St. v. McKinney, 29 M 375, 74 P 1095 (1904). The court refused to intervene to remove the referendum from the ballot prior to a vote of the people so as not to violate the constitutional rights of popular sovereignty and self-government. Recognizing important distinctions between the processes of referendum and initiative, the standard applied to the referendum was the same applied to examination of the title of other products of the Legislature. The court affirmed the District Court finding of no statutory authority for preelection nullification of a legislative referendum and noted a strong presumption in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments. The ballot language was not purposely misleading and sufficiently identified the measure to provide for an informed vote. Harper v. Greely, 234 M 259, 763 P2d 650, 45 St. Rep. 1889 (1988), distinguishing State ex rel. Steen v. Murray, 144 M 61, 394 P2d 761 (1964), and State ex rel. Harper v. Waltermire, 213 M 425, 691 P2d 826, 41 St. Rep. 2212 (1984). See also State ex rel. Boese v. Waltermire, 224 M 230, 730 P2d 375, 43 St. Rep. 2156 (1986), and T&W Chevrolet v. Darvial, 196 M 287, 641 P2d 1368 (1982).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Presentation to Governor Required: It was a fatal error for the Legislature to ignore the Governor by neglecting and refusing to present proposed constitutional amendments to him. State ex rel. Livingstone v. Murray, 137 M 557, 354 P2d 552 (1960).

Length of Terms of Constitutional Officers: Public offices may be created, abolished, and the terms thereof shortened or lengthened by constitutional amendment at any time the people choose to express their will to that effect in the manner provided by Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. O'Connell v. Duncan, 108 M 141, 88 P2d 73 (1939).

Proposal Fails if Question Raised Before Election: Unless the requirements of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., prescribing the steps to be taken by the Legislative Assembly in the submission of constitutional amendments are followed without substantial deviation—nothing important being omitted—the proposal must fail if attack thereon be made before the election. Held, that the requirement of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., that "proposed amendments (to the constitution), together with the ayes and nays of each house thereon, shall be entered in full on their respective journals", was mandatory. Tipton v. Mitchell, 97 M 420, 35 P2d 110 (1934).

Revision and Amendment Distinguished: Section authorizing the consolidation of county and city governments was not an attempted revision under Art. XIX, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., but was an amendment under section 9 thereof. State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Substantial Compliance: Article XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., provides inter alia that a proposed amendment thereto shall be entered in full on the Journals of both houses. A bill proposing an amendment to Art. XII, sec. 15, 1889 Mont. Const., creating the State Board of Equalization (now State Tax Appeal Board), was properly passed by both houses, but while it was entered in full on the Journal of the House, it was not so entered in the Senate Journal. The bill acted upon in both houses was in identically the same language, identifying reference to it having been made in the Senate Journal, and as passed was published by the Secretary of State and ratified by the people. Held, that the course pursued, though not literal compliance with the constitutional provision, was in substantial compliance therewith, the object of the requirement—certainly as to the proposed amendment—having been clearly established by the Journals. Martien v. Porter, 68 M 450, 219 P 817 (1923).

Publication — Sufficiency of: The provision of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring publication of a proposed constitutional amendment in full in at least one newspaper in each county for 3 months previous to the next general election, was satisfied by publication in a weekly or once a week in a daily or semiweekly paper, in the absence of a provision indicating the number of issues in which the proposed amendment must appear or designating the character of the paper as monthly, weekly, or daily. State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914).

Purpose: Article XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., deals with but one subject—amendments to the Constitution. In its adoption it was not the purpose of the people to render their fundamental law incapable of change, but on the contrary, to provide a plain, simple, and easily executed method of amendment. State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914).

Unity of Subject: The fact that an amendment to the state Constitution may be separated into two or more propositions is not alone decisive of its unconstitutionality under the clause of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring unity of subject in the submission of an amendment. The rule is that if, in the light of common sense, the propositions have to do with different subjects so essentially unrelated that their association is artificial, they are not one, but if they may be logically viewed as parts or aspects of a single plan, the above constitutional requirement is met in their submission as one amendment. State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Amendments to Be Separate and Separately Voted Upon: The amendment to Art. XVI, sec. 4, 1889 Mont. Const., changing the term of County Commissioners from 4 years to 6 years, extending the tenure of the then incumbents, and giving District Judges power to fill vacancies on the Board, approved February 26, 1901, is not violative of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., but must be considered as one scheme, with the single purpose of establishing and maintaining in existence a Board, two members of which should at all times be experienced men. State ex rel. Teague v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 34 M 426, 87 P 450 (1906), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Entering Upon Journal of Each House — Essential: A proposed amendment to the Constitution, which provided for calling in a District Judge when a Supreme Court Judge was disqualified, was void for failure to enter on the Journals of both branches of the Legislature a full copy of said amendment, before its submission to the people, as required by Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const. Durfee v. Harper, 22 M 354, 56 P 582 (1899).

Publication of Proposed Amendments — Mandatory: The provision of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., requiring that the Secretary of State shall publish a proposed constitutional amendment for 3 months prior to the next general election, is not only mandatory by its express terms but is also mandatory by virtue of Art. III, sec. 29, 1889 Mont. Const., declaring that the provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise, and a noncompliance with such requirement for publication renders the adoption of a proposed amendment nugatory. State ex rel. Woods v. Tooker, 15 M 8, 37 P 840 (1894). See also State ex rel. Lloyd v. Rotwitt, 15 M 29, 37 P 845 (1894).

2002 Amendment by Referendum: Constitutional Amendment No. 37, proposed by Ch. 329, L. 2001, and approved at the general election held November 5, 2002, at end of first sentence of (1) substituted "each of at least one-half of the counties" for "each of two-fifths of the legislative districts". Amendment effective July 1, 2003. (See text of referendum in final volume of 2003 Laws of Montana.)

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER 1972 CONSTITUTION

Single-Subject Requirement — Inapplicable to Constitutional Initiatives: The single-subject requirement of Art. V, sec. 11(3), Mont. Const., does not apply to constitutional amendments proposed by initiative. Mont. Ass'n of Counties v. St., 2017 MT 267, 389 Mont. 183, 404 P.3d 733.

Attorney General Statements on Initiative Considered True and Impartial — Judicial Deference to Statements That Meet Statutory Requirements: Plaintiffs challenged the Attorney General's statements of purpose and implication on a ballot initiative that concerned the recall of elected justices and judges when voters determined that appropriate cause existed. The District Court held that the Attorney General's statements satisfied statutory requirements, and plaintiffs appealed, requesting the Supreme Court to rewrite the ballot statements. The Supreme Court applied the standard in Stop Over Spending Mont. v. St., 2006 MT 178, 333 M 42, 139 P3d 788 (2006), that courts will defer to Attorney General statements on ballot initiatives provided the statements meet statutory requirements, noting that 13-27-312 does not grant proponents or opponents the right to a ballot statement of their choosing. Rather, a statement that explains the ballot measure in ordinary plain language and that is true and impartial and not argumentative or likely to create prejudice for or against the measure is in compliance with the statute. In this case, the statement of purpose was true, and the Attorney General's decision to omit what plaintiffs characterized as salient provisions from the statement of purpose did not prevent voters from casting an intelligent and informed ballot. The Attorney General's statement of implication was true, impartial, and a plainly written explanation of a vote for and against the initiative. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to rewrite the Attorney General's statements and affirmed the District Court. Citizens Right to Recall v. St., 2006 MT 192, 333 M 153, 142 P3d 764 (2006), followed in Mont. Consumer Fin. Ass'n v. St., 2010 MT 185, 357 Mont. 237, 238 P.3d 765. See also State ex rel. Wenzel v. Murray, 178 M 441, 585 P2d 633 (1978), and Montanans Against Tax Hikes v. St., 2018 MT 201, 392 Mont. 344, 423 P.3d 1078.

District Court's Rewriting of Attorney General's Statements Explaining Initiative Proposal Reversed When Statements Accurate: Plaintiff group sought an initiative petition to include an additional constitutional limit on legislative appropriations to an amount to be determined by applying a formula based on population growth and inflation unless an increase was approved by the electorate. As required, the Attorney General prepared statements explaining the purpose of the measure, the implications of a vote for and against the measure, and a fiscal statement. Plaintiffs were dissatisfied with the statements and filed a complaint. The District Court determined that all the statements were inaccurate, rewrote the statements, and ordered that the court's statements rather than the Attorney General's be placed on the ballot should the measure qualify. The Attorney General appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Employing the rules of construction developed under State ex rel. Wenzel v. Murray, 178 M 441, 585 P2d 633 (1978), the Supreme Court held that the District Court was incorrect in determining that the statement of purpose was inaccurate and omitted salient provisions of the measure. It is not the job of a court to add to the requirements of 13-27-312 that to be accurate, a statement of the purpose of an initiative must include a description of how it can be enforced or a statement of when it will become effective. Without engaging in a comparison of the statements, the Supreme Court held that the Attorney General's statement of purpose was adequate to meet the statutory requirements to provide a true and impartial explanation of the proposed ballot issue in plain, easily understood language. Likewise, the statement of implication and the fiscal statement were adequate, if not perfect, satisfied statutory requirements, and were not confusing or misleading, and the Supreme Court ordered that the issue be placed on the ballot containing the statements prepared by the Attorney General. Stop Over Spending Mont. v. St., 2006 MT 178, 333 M 42, 139 P3d 788 (2006).

Signature Distribution Invalid: The 2002 amendment to this section requiring that signatures be gathered on a county basis rather than on a legislative district basis was unconstitutional on its face under the 14th amendment's equal protection clause and therefore invalid. Mont. PIRG v. Johnson, CV 03-183-M-DWM (D.C. Mont. 2005).

Severance of Constitutional Amendment Language Not Curative of Defect When Initiative Improperly Submitted to Voters: Constitutional Initiative No. 75 (CI-75) expressly amended three parts of the Montana Constitution without allowing a separate vote on each amendment and thus was unconstitutional under Art. XIV, sec. 11, Mont. Const. Language in the initiative that would have severed the invalid parts from the valid parts could not cure the constitutional defect in CI-75 because the defect was in the submission of CI-75 to voters with more than one constitutional amendment. Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Submission of Constitutional Initiative Amending Three Parts of Constitution Violative of Separate Vote Requirement: Plaintiffs filed an original application for declaration of judgment and injunctive relief, challenging the validity of Constitutional Initiative No. 75 (CI-75), which was passed by the voters and stated that no new tax or tax increase could be enacted unless approved by a majority of the electorate. The initiative amended Art. VIII, Mont. Const., revising state revenue and finance provisions; amended Art. II, sec. 18, Mont. Const., providing that sovereign immunity did not shield public officials or employees from appropriate civil liability for violating CI-75; and provided that notwithstanding the referendum provisions of Art. VI, sec. 10, Mont. Const., before a bill imposing new or increased taxes is referred to the people, the Governor had veto power. The dispositive issue was that CI-75 had two or more constitutional amendments, in violation of Art. XIV, sec. 11, Mont. Const., which is a cogent constitutional recognition of the circumstances under which Montana voters receive constitutional initiatives, namely that a separate vote is required for each proposed constitutional amendment. Citing Armatta v. Kitzhaber, 959 P2d 49 (Oreg. 1998), the Supreme Court held that the separate vote requirement is distinguishable as different and narrower than the single subject requirement in Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., and that to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, holdings to the contrary in State ex rel. Teague v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 34 M 426, 87 P 450 (1906), State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914), and State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), were overruled. Because CI-75 expressly amended three parts of the Montana Constitution without allowing a separate vote on each amendment, CI-75 was unconstitutional under Art. XIV, sec. 11, Mont. Const. Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999), following State ex rel. Hinz v. Moody, 71 M 473, 230 P 575 (1924), and Sawyer Stores, Inc. v. Mitchell, 103 M 148, 62 P2d 342 (1936). However, see Mont. Ass'n of Counties v. St., 2017 MT 267, 389 Mont. 183, 404 P.3d 733, clarifying that the single-subject requirement does not apply to constitutional initiatives.

Sufficiency of Title of 1988 Welfare Referendum — Applicable Standard: The title of a referendum "allowing the legislature greater discretion to determine the eligibility, duration, and level of economic assistance and social services to those in need" was found by the Supreme Court to be legally sufficient after applying the constitutional requirement of clarity of title set out in Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., and employing the rules of construction developed under State ex rel. Wenzel v. Murray, 178 M 441, 585 P2d 633 (1978), and St. v. McKinney, 29 M 375, 74 P 1095 (1904). The court refused to intervene to remove the referendum from the ballot prior to a vote of the people so as not to violate the constitutional rights of popular sovereignty and self-government. Recognizing important distinctions between the processes of referendum and initiative, the standard applied to the referendum was the same applied to examination of the title of other products of the Legislature. The court affirmed the District Court finding of no statutory authority for preelection nullification of a legislative referendum and noted a strong presumption in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments. The ballot language was not purposely misleading and sufficiently identified the measure to provide for an informed vote. Harper v. Greely, 234 M 259, 763 P2d 650, 45 St. Rep. 1889 (1988), distinguishing State ex rel. Steen v. Murray, 144 M 61, 394 P2d 761 (1964), and State ex rel. Harper v. Waltermire, 213 M 425, 691 P2d 826, 41 St. Rep. 2212 (1984). See also State ex rel. Boese v. Waltermire, 224 M 230, 730 P2d 375, 43 St. Rep. 2156 (1986), and T&W Chevrolet v. Darvial, 196 M 287, 641 P2d 1368 (1982).

Resubmission of Voided Constitutional Initiative Improper: When procedural defects of constitutional proportions cause the first election result on an approved or defeated constitutional initiative to be voided, the initiative may not be resubmitted to the electorate at the next regular statewide election. State ex rel. Montanans for the Preservation of Citizens' Rights v. Waltermire, 231 M 406, 757 P2d 746, 45 St. Rep. 719 (1988).

Initiative Amendment Void — Material Language Difference — Improper Publication Procedures: The language of an amendment to Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., as filed and certified by the Secretary of State, was not the same language submitted to the voters at the election. Because the difference in language was material and because publication of the proposed initiative prior to election did not follow constitutional mandates, the purported amendment was held to be void. State ex rel. Mont. Citizens for the Preservation of Citizens' Rights v. Waltermire, 227 M 85, 738 P2d 1255, 44 St. Rep. 913 (1987). Petitions for rehearing, reconsideration, and clarification denied, 44 St. Rep. 929A (1987).

Summary of Constitutional Amendment Insufficient: Article XIV, sec. 9, Mont. Const., requires "the amendment" in a constitutional initiative to be published as provided by law. The provision in 13-27-311 that "[a] summary of the amendment" would suffice itself constitutes an amendment to the constitution insofar as initiatives are concerned and should not be allowed. Any initiative amendment adopted in this statutory manner is void. State ex rel. Mont. Citizens for the Preservation of Citizens' Rights v. Waltermire, 227 M 85, 738 P2d 1255, 44 St. Rep. 913 (1987). Petitions for rehearing, reconsideration, and clarification denied, 44 St. Rep. 929A (1987).

No Constitutional Conflict in Initiative Absent Enactment — Time for Objections: In considering the question of a constitutional conflict in an initiative measure that, if enacted, would abolish property taxes, the Supreme Court declined to intervene in the initiative process prior to a vote absent extraordinary causes, finding that it would be an unjustified infringement of the people's initiative rights to remove the measure from the ballot. The court noted that no constitutional conflict existed until and unless the measure passed by popular vote and that the time period until the effective date would allow sufficient time to raise objections to the measure. State ex rel. Mont. School Bd. Ass'n v. Waltermire, 224 M 296, 729 P2d 1297, 43 St. Rep. 2198 (1986).

Extent of Court Consideration of Constitutional Amendment Initiative: Unless it appears to be absolutely essential, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the right retained by the people to change the Montana Constitution by initiative, and an initiative will not be removed from the ballot prior to vote unless it is clearly unconstitutional on its face or has been improperly submitted. The court will not accept jurisdiction to decide if the statement of purpose and statement of implication are untrue unless the challenge procedure in 13-27-316 is followed. State ex rel. Mont. Citizens for the Preservation of Citizens' Rights v. Waltermire, 224 M 273, 729 P2d 1283, 43 St. Rep. 2192 (1986).

Challenge of Multiplicitous Initiative Subjects — Procedural Review Requirements to Be Met: An opponent who challenges an initiative on the grounds that the title contains more than one subject, in violation of Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., must meet the procedural review requirements of 13-27-316. State ex rel. Boese v. Waltermire, 224 M 230, 730 P2d 375, 43 St. Rep. 2156 (1986). See also State ex rel. Mont. Citizens for the Preservation of Citizens' Rights v. Waltermire, 224 M 273, 729 P2d 1283, 43 St. Rep. 2192 (1986).

Legislative Resolution in Excess of Initiative Power: In this original proceeding for a Writ of Injunction, plaintiffs sought an order declaring a constitutional initiative void and unconstitutional. The initiative, if adopted by the voters, would have amended the Montana Constitution to direct the 1985 Legislature to adopt a resolution requesting Congress to call a constitutional convention for the sole purpose of adopting a balanced budget amendment. It also would have required that if the resolution was not adopted within 90 legislative days, the Legislature would remain in session without pay until the resolution was adopted. The Supreme Court, in granting injunctive relief, held that although the initiative was in form a constitutional amendment, it was in substance a legislative resolution. The initiative power conferred by the Montana Constitution does not include the power to enact a legislative resolution. The electorate cannot circumvent the constitution by indirectly doing that which can be done directly. State ex rel. Harper v. Waltermire, 213 M 425, 691 P2d 826, 41 St. Rep. 2212 (1984).

DECISIONS UNDER 1889 CONSTITUTION

Initiative Measure Not Amendatory of Constitution — Contrary to Constitution — Invalid: Proposed Initiative Measure No. 63, which would legalize lotteries and repeal 23-5-201 through 23-5-211 (now repealed), could not be considered as an amendment to the Montana Constitution where it did not comply with Art. XIX, sec. 8 or 9, 1889 Mont. Const. Therefore, the measure in violation of the 1889 Constitution was invalid. State ex rel. Steen v. Murray, 144 M 61, 394 P2d 761 (1964).

Length of Terms of Constitutional Officers: Public offices could be created, abolished, and the terms thereof shortened or lengthened by constitutional amendment at any time the people choose to express their will to that effect in the manner provided by Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const. State ex rel. O'Connell v. Duncan, 108 M 141, 88 P2d 73 (1939).

Substantial Compliance Required — Challenge Prior to Election: Unless the requirements of Art. XIX, sec. 9, 1889 Mont. Const., prescribing the steps to be taken by the Legislative Assembly in the submission of constitutional amendments, are followed without substantial deviation, the proposal must fail if attack thereon be made before the election. Tipton v. Mitchell, 97 M 420, 35 P2d 110 (1934).

Amendment and Revision Distinguished: Section of the state Constitution, authorizing the consolidation of county and city governments, was not an attempted revision under Art. XIX, sec. 8, 1889 Mont. Const., but was an amendment under section 9 thereof. State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), overruled, to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, in Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Attorney General's Opinions

Judicial Decision Invalidating Constitutional Amendments — Constitutional Language and Statutory Implementation Language Restored: In 2002, Montana voters approved Constitutional Amendment Nos. 37 and 38, along with statutory implementing provisions, to modify county distribution requirements for signatures to qualify an initiative petition for the ballot. In Mont. PIRG v. Johnson, CV 03-183-M-DWM (D.C. Mont. 2005), a federal District Court held that the amended distribution requirements resulted in an unequal treatment of qualified electors in different counties and were unconstitutional on their face and invalid. The Attorney General cited State ex rel. Woodahl v. District Court, 162 M 283, 511 P2d 318 (1973), in concluding that the nullification of the constitutional amendments by the judicial decision invalidating the county distribution requirements restored the language of the constitution and implementing statutes as they existed before the approval of the invalid amendments. 51 A.G. Op. 2 (2005).

Submission of Constitutional Initiative at Statewide Primary Election Allowable: Citing numerous cases affirming the rationale that a primary election cannot be distinguished from any other regular or general election prescribed by law and distinguishing a primary election from a special election, which is an election called for a special purpose and not one fixed by law to occur at regular intervals, the Attorney General held that a constitutional amendment proposed by initiative pursuant to this section may be submitted to the voters at a regular statewide primary election. 44 A.G. Op. 20 (1991). See also 19 A.G. Op. 412 (1942).

Petitions — Qualified Signers: A petition for a proposed constitutional amendment must be signed by 10% of the qualified electors of the state, and that number must include at least 10% of the qualified electors in each of two-fifths of the house districts throughout the state. 35 A.G. Op. 80 (1974).

Case Notes

Constitutional Referendum Void — Separate Vote Requirement — Substantive Changes Not Closely Related: The separate vote requirement for constitutional initiatives prohibits a proposal that makes two or more changes to the Montana Constitution that are substantive and not closely related. Furthermore, if a proposed constitutional amendment adds new matter to the Constitution, that proposition is at least one change in and of itself. Modifying an existing constitutional provision is considered at least one change, whether that effect is express or implicit. Although the text of CI-116, also known as "Marsy's Law", was contained in a new section, the constitutional initiative implicitly modified Art. II, secs. 2(3), 9, 10, 17, 20, 21, and 24. Because these changes were substantive and not closely related, CI-116 violated the separate-vote requirement, and it was void in its entirety. Mont. Ass'n of Counties v. St., 2017 MT 267, 389 Mont. 183, 404 P.3d 733.

Severance of Constitutional Amendment Language Not Curative of Defect When Initiative Improperly Submitted to Voters: Constitutional Initiative No. 75 (CI-75) expressly amended three parts of the Montana Constitution without allowing a separate vote on each amendment and thus was unconstitutional under this section. Language in the initiative that would have severed the invalid parts from the valid parts could not cure the constitutional defect in CI-75 because the defect was in the submission of CI-75 to voters with more than one constitutional amendment. Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999).

Submission of Constitutional Initiative Amending Three Parts of Constitution Violative of Separate Vote Requirement: Plaintiffs filed an original application for declaration of judgment and injunctive relief, challenging the validity of Constitutional Initiative No. 75 (CI-75), which was passed by the voters and stated that no new tax or tax increase could be enacted unless approved by a majority of the electorate. The initiative amended Art. VIII, Mont. Const., revising state revenue and finance provisions; amended Art. II, sec. 18, Mont. Const., providing that sovereign immunity did not shield public officials or employees from appropriate civil liability for violating CI-75; and provided that notwithstanding the referendum provisions of Art. VI, sec. 10, Mont. Const., before a bill imposing new or increased taxes is referred to the people, the Governor had veto power. The dispositive issue was that CI-75 had two or more constitutional amendments, in violation of this section, which is a cogent constitutional recognition of the circumstances under which Montana voters receive constitutional initiatives, namely that a separate vote is required for each proposed constitutional amendment. Citing Armatta v. Kitzhaber, 959 P2d 49 (Oreg. 1998), the Supreme Court held that the separate vote requirement is distinguishable as different and narrower than the single subject requirement in Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., and that to the extent that a constitutional amendment may be valid under the single subject rule but fail under the separate vote rule, holdings to the contrary in State ex rel. Teague v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 34 M 426, 87 P 450 (1906), State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914), and State ex rel. Corry v. Cooney, 70 M 355, 225 P 1007 (1924), were overruled. Because CI-75 expressly amended three parts of the Montana Constitution without allowing a separate vote on each amendment, CI-75 was unconstitutional under this section. Marshall v. St., 1999 MT 33, 293 M 274, 975 P2d 325, 56 St. Rep. 142 (1999), following State ex rel. Hinz v. Moody, 71 M 473, 230 P 575 (1924), and Sawyer Stores, Inc. v. Mitchell, 103 M 148, 62 P2d 342 (1936). However, see Mont. Ass'n of Counties v. St., 2017 MT 267, 389 Mont. 183, 404 P.3d 733, clarifying that the single-subject requirement does not apply to constitutional initiatives.

TRANSITION SCHEDULE

Transition Convention Notes

Provides for an orderly change from the 1889 constitution to the 1972 constitution.

Transition Compiler's Comments

"ADOPTION SCHEDULE

These Schedule provisions are part of this Constitution only for the limited purposes of determining whether this Constitution has been adopted, determining what changes result from the vote on each of the separately submitted issues, and establishing the general effective date of this Constitution. No provision of this Schedule shall be published unless it becomes part of the Constitution as the result of the adoption of a separately submitted provision.

Section 1. This Constitution, if approved by a majority of those voting at the election as provided by the Constitution of 1889, shall take effect on July 1, 1973, except as otherwise provided in sections 1 and 2 of the Transition Schedule. The Constitution of 1889, as amended, shall thereafter be of no effect.

Section 2. (1) If separate issue 2A concerning the unicameral form of the legislature is approved by a majority of those voting at the election and if the proposed Constitution is approved by the electors, then:

(a) ARTICLE V, THE LEGISLATURE, shall be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

ARTICLE V
THE LEGISLATURE

Section 1. Power and Structure. The legislative power is vested in a legislature of one chamber whose members are designated senators. The people reserve to themselves the powers of initiative and referendum.

Section 2. Size. The number of senators shall be provided by law, but it shall not be smaller than 90 nor larger than 105.

Section 3. Election and Terms. A senator shall be elected for a term of four years to begin on a date provided by law. One-half of the senators shall be elected every two years.

Section 4. Qualifications. A candidate for the legislature shall be a resident of the state for at least one year next preceding the general election. For six months next preceding the general election he shall be a resident of the county if it contains one or more districts or of the district if it contains all or parts of more than one county.

Section 5. Compensation. Each member of the legislature shall receive compensation for his services and allowances provided by law. No legislature may fix its own compensation.

Section 6. Sessions. The legislature shall be a continuous body for two-year periods beginning when newly elected members take office. Any business, bill, or resolution pending at adjournment of a session shall carry over with the same status to any other session of the legislature during the biennium. The legislature shall meet at least once a year in regular sessions of not more than 60 legislative days. Any legislature may increase the limit on the length of any subsequent session. The legislature may be convened in special sessions by the governor or at the written request of a majority of the members.

Section 7. Vacancies. A vacancy in the legislature shall be filled by special election for the unexpired term unless otherwise provided by law.

Section 8. Immunity. A member of the legislature is privileged from arrest during attendance at sessions of the legislature and in going to and returning therefrom, unless apprehended in the commission of a felony or a breach of the peace. He shall not be questioned in any other place for any speech or debate in the legislature.

Section 9. Disqualification. No member of the legislature shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, be appointed to any civil office under the state; and no member of congress, or other person holding an office (except notary public, or the militia) under the United States or this state, shall be a member of the legislature during his continuance in office.

Section 10. Organization and Procedure. (1) The legislature shall judge the election and qualifications of senators. It may by law vest in the courts the power to try and determine contested elections. It shall choose its officers from among its members, keep a journal, and make rules for its proceedings. It may expel or punish a senator for good cause shown with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the senators.

(2) A majority of the senators constitutes a quorum. A smaller number may adjourn from day to day and compel attendance of absent members.

(3) The sessions of the legislature and of the committee of the whole, all committee meetings, and all hearings shall be open to the public.

(4) The legislature may establish a legislative council and other interim committees. The legislature shall establish a legislative post-audit committee which shall supervise post-auditing duties provided by law.

Section 11. Bills. (1) A law shall be passed by bill which shall not be so altered or amended on its passage through the legislature as to change its original purpose. No bill shall become law except by a vote of the majority of all members present and voting.

(2) Every vote of each member on each substantive question in the legislature, in any committee, or in committee of the whole shall be recorded and made public. On final passage, the vote shall be taken by ayes and noes and the names entered on the journal.

(3) Each bill, except general appropriation bills and bills for the codification and general revision of the laws, shall contain only one subject, clearly expressed in its title. If any subject is embraced in any act and is not expressed in the title, only so much of the act not so expressed is void.

(4) A general appropriation bill shall contain only appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches, for interest on the public debt, and for public schools. Every other appropriation shall be made by a separate bill containing but one subject.

(5) No appropriation shall be made for religious, charitable, industrial, educational, or benevolent purposes to any private individual, private association, or private corporation not under control of the state.

(6) A law may be challenged on the ground of non-compliance with this section only within two years after its effective date.

Section 12. Local and Special Legislation. The legislature shall not pass a special or local act when a general act is, or can be made, applicable.

Section 13. Impeachment. (1) The governor, executive officers, heads of state departments, judicial officers, and such other officers as may be provided by law are subject to impeachment, and upon conviction shall be removed from office. Other proceedings for removal from public office for cause may be provided by law.

(2) The legislature shall provide for the manner, procedure, and causes for impeachment and shall provide for a tribunal.

(3) Impeachment can be brought only by a two-thirds vote of the legislature. The tribunal hearing the charges shall convict only by a vote of two-thirds or more of its members.

(4) Conviction shall extend only to removal from office, but the party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall also be liable to prosecution according to law.

Section 14. Districting and Apportionment. (1) The state shall be divided into as many districts as there are senators and each district shall elect one senator. Each district shall consist of compact and contiguous territory. All districts shall be as nearly equal in population as is practicable.

(2) In the legislative session following ratification of this constitution and thereafter in each session preceding each federal population census, a commission of five citizens, none of whom may be public officials, shall be selected to prepare a plan for redistricting and reapportioning the state into legislative and congressional districts. The majority and minority leaders of the legislature shall each select two commissioners. Within 20 days after their designation, the four commissioners shall select the fifth member, who shall serve as chairman of the commission. If the four members fail to select the fifth member within the time provided, a majority of the supreme court shall select him.

(3) The commission shall submit its plan to the legislature at the first regular session after its appointment or after the census figures are available. Within 30 days after submission, the legislature shall return the plan to the commission with its recommendations. Within 30 days thereafter, the commission shall file its final plan with the secretary of state and it shall become law. The commission is then dissolved.

Section 15. Referendum of Unicameral Legislature. (1) In 1980 the secretary of state shall place upon the ballot at the general election the question: "Shall the unicameral legislature form be continued?"

(2) If a majority of the qualified electors voting on the question answer in the affirmative, the form shall be continued, and this section shall be of no further effect.

(3) If a majority of the qualified electors voting on the question answer in the negative, Article V of this Constitution is amended by deleting sections 1, 2, 3, 10, 13, and 14, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

(a) "Section 1. Power and Structure. The legislative power is vested in a legislature consisting of a senate and a house of representatives. The people reserve to themselves the powers of initiative and referendum."

(b) "Section 2. Size. The size of the legislature shall be provided by law, but the senate shall not have more than 50 or fewer than 40 members and the house shall not have more than 100 or fewer than 80 members."

(c) "Section 3. Election and Terms. A member of the house of representatives shall be elected for a term of two years and a member of the senate for a term of four years, each to begin on a date provided by law. One-half of the senators shall be elected every two years."

(d) "Section 10. Organization and Procedure. (1) Each house shall judge the election and qualifications of its members. It may by law vest in the courts the power to try and determine contested elections. Each house shall choose its officers from among its members, keep a journal, and make rules for its proceedings. Each house may expel or punish a member for good cause shown with the concurrence of two-thirds of all its members.

"(2) A majority of each house constitutes a quorum. A smaller number may adjourn from day to day and compel attendance of absent members.

"(3) The sessions of the legislature and of the committee of the whole, all committee meetings, and all hearings shall be open to the public.

"(4) The legislature may establish a legislative council and other interim committees. The legislature shall establish a legislative post-audit committee which shall supervise post-auditing duties provided by law.

"(5) Neither house shall, without consent of the other, adjourn or recess for more than three days or to any place other than that in which the two houses are sitting."

(e) "Section 13. Impeachment. (1) The governor, executive officers, heads of state departments, judicial officers, and such other officers as may be provided by law are subject to impeachment, and upon conviction shall be removed from office. Other proceedings for removal from public office for cause may be provided by law.

"(2) The legislature shall provide for the manner, procedure and causes for impeachment and may select the senate as tribunal.

"(3) Impeachment shall be brought only by a two-thirds vote of the house. The tribunal hearing the charges shall convict only by a vote of two-thirds or more of its members.

"(4) Conviction shall extend only to removal from office, but the party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall also be liable to prosecution according to law."

(f) "Section 14. Districting and Apportionment. (1) The state shall be divided into as many districts as there are members of the house, and each district shall elect one representative. Each senate district shall be composed of two adjoining house districts, and shall elect one senator. Each district shall consist of compact and contiguous territory. All districts shall be as nearly equal in population as is practicable.

"(2) In the legislative session following this amendment and thereafter in each session preceding each federal population census, a commission of five citizens, none of whom may be public officials, shall be selected to prepare a plan for redistricting and reapportioning the state into legislative and congressional districts. The majority and minority leaders of each house shall each designate one commissioner. Within 20 days after their designation, the four commissioners shall select the fifth member, who shall serve as chairman of the commission. If the four members fail to select the fifth member within the time provided, a majority of the supreme court shall select him.

"(3) The commission shall submit its plan to the legislature at the first regular session after its appointment or after the census figures are available. Within 30 days after submission, the legislature shall return the plan to the commission with its recommendations. Within 30 days thereafter, the commission shall file its final plan with the secretary of state and it shall become law. The commission is then dissolved."

(4) The members of the unicameral legislature shall remain in office and their authority to act shall continue until the members of a bicameral body are elected and qualified.

(5) The Senate chamber existing upon the date of adoption of this Article shall remain intact until the election provided for in this section has determined whether the unicameral legislature is to continue.

(6) When the provisions of this section have been carried out, it shall be of no further effect.

(b) The words "of each house" are deleted from subsection (2) of section 6 and from section 8, ARTICLE VIII, REVENUE AND FINANCE.

(c) The word "legislature" is substituted for "senate" in subsections (1), (2), and (4) of section 8, ARTICLE VI, THE EXECUTIVE, in subsections (1) and (2) of section 8, ARTICLE VII, THE JUDICIARY, and in subsection (1) of section 2, ARTICLE XII, DEPARTMENTS AND INSTITUTIONS.

(2) If separate issue 2A concerning the unicameral form of the legislature is not approved by the electors and if the proposed Constitution is approved by the electors, then ARTICLE V, THE LEGISLATURE, shall be retained.

Section 3. (1) If separate issue 3A is not approved by a majority of those voting at the election and if the proposed Constitution is approved by the electors, then section 9 of ARTICLE III, GENERAL GOVERNMENT shall be retained.

(2) If separate issue 3A is approved by the electors and if the proposed Constitution is approved by the electors, then section 9 shall be deleted from ARTICLE III, GENERAL GOVERNMENT and the following substituted therefor: "Section 9. Gambling. All forms of gambling, lotteries, and gift enterprises are prohibited unless authorized by acts of the legislature or by the people through initiative or referendum."

Section 4. If separate issue 4B is approved by a majority of those voting at the election and if the proposed Constitution is approved by the electors, then there shall be added to section 28, ARTICLE II, DECLARATION OF RIGHTS, the following sentence: "Death shall not be prescribed as a penalty for any crime against the state." And there shall be deleted from section 21 of the same ARTICLE the following: "except for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.""

Deletions From 1889 Montana Constitution: As listed in the official publication of the 1972 Constitution required by Ch. 296, L. 1971, as amended, the following provisions appearing in the 1889 Constitution were not included in the proposed 1972 Constitution:

Section Executed: Section 1 of the Transition Schedule provided:

"Section 1. Accelerated effective date. Section 6 (SESSIONS) and section 14 (DISTRICTING AND APPORTIONMENT) of Article V, THE LEGISLATURE, shall be effective January 1, 1973."

By letter of December 4, 1974, the Attorney General certified to the Secretary of State that section 1 of the Transition Schedule had been executed:

"Section 6 (SESSIONS) of Article V, Constitution of Montana (1972), has been fully executed. However, a proposed amendment to Section 6, Article V, was submitted to the electorate during the general election held on November 5, 1974, which received a majority vote in favor of its adoption. The passage of this amendment will return the Montana legislature to biennial sessions.

Section 14 (DISTRICTING AND APPORTIONMENT) of Article V, Constitution of Montana (1972), has also been fully executed. The reapportionment commission referred to in Section 14 filed its plan with the Secretary of State on February 27, 1974, after receiving recommendations from both houses of the legislature."

Section 2. Delayed effective date.

Convention Notes

Sections on size of legislature, election and terms of its members would become effective when the reapportionment plan becomes law. If this is in 1974 then elections would be held in November 1974 for new members of the legislature to take office January 1, 1975.

Section Executed: Section 2 of the Transition Schedule provided:

"Section 2. Delayed effective date. The provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of Article V, THE LEGISLATURE, shall not become effective until the date the first redistricting and reapportionment plan becomes law."

By letter of December 4, 1974, the Attorney General certified to the Secretary of State that section 2 of the Transition Schedule had been executed:

"The first redistricting and reapportionment plan was filed with the Secretary of State on February 27, 1974, and pursuant to Section 43-117, Revised Codes of Montana 1947, became law as of that date. Therefore, the provisions of Sections 1, 2 and 3, Article V, Constitution of Montana (1972), are now in effect."

Section 3. Prospective operation of declaration of rights.

Convention Notes

Any new rights created in Article II take effect only after July 1, 1973. It does not create any right for past events.

Case Notes

Divorce Decree: In action to modify a divorce decree entered before the effective date of the 1972 Montana Constitution, husband could not attack an award of alimony on the ground that it violated Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const.; by virtue of section 3 of the Transition Schedule, the rights created by Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., apply prospectively only and do not serve to invalidate the award if it was proper when made. Rogers v. Rogers, 169 M 403, 548 P2d 141 (1976).

Action Against Employer: Right of injured workman to seek redress against statutory employer (prime contractor) was effective prospectively from the effective date of the 1972 Montana Constitution (July 1, 1973), and thus complaint that was filed 3 months before the effective date was dismissed. Poulson v. Walsh-Groves, 166 M 163, 531 P2d 1335 (1975).

Section 4. Terms of judiciary.

Convention Notes

Since the proposed constitution changes the length of terms of office of judges this provision makes it clear that all judges may serve to the end of the term for which they were elected.

Section Executed: Section 4 of the Transition Schedule provided:

"Section 4. Terms of judiciary. Supreme court justices, district court judges, and justices of the peace holding office when this Constitution becomes effective shall serve the terms for which they were elected or appointed."

By letter of December 20, 1978, the Attorney General certified to the Secretary of State that section 4 of the Transition Schedule had been executed:

"Section 4 of the Schedule, "terms of Judiciary" has been executed. All Supreme Court justices, District Court judges and Justices of the Peace holding office on July 1, 1973, have served the terms for which they had been elected or appointed."

Section 5. Terms of legislators.

Convention Notes

(1) If the reapportionment and redistricting plan becomes effective after the 1974 legislative session, the terms of legislators serving in that session would end December 31, 1974. (2) Section 3, Article V provides that senators have four year terms but that one-half are elected every two years. This section provides that one-half of the senators first elected will have only two year terms.

Section Executed: Section 5 of the Transition Schedule provided:

"Section 5. Terms of legislators. (1) The terms of all legislators elected before the effective date of this Constitution shall end on December 31 of the year in which the first redistricting and reapportionment plan becomes law.

(2) The senators first elected under this Constitution shall draw lots to establish a term of two years for one-half of their number."

By letter of March 24, 1977, the Attorney General certified to the Secretary of State that section 5 of the Transition Schedule had been fully executed:

"Subsection (1) of Section 5 has been fully executed. Under that subsection, the first redistricting and reapportionment plan was filed with the Secretary of State and became effective on February 27, 1974. Therefore, the terms of all legislators elected prior to the effective date of the 1972 Constitution on July 1, 1973, ended on December 31, 1974.

Subsection (2) of Section 5 of the Transition Schedule has been fully executed."

Section 6. General transition.

Convention Notes

Unless the proposed constitution specifically changes a law it will not affect any rights or duties or the validity of contracts, bonds, etc. All elected officials serve out their present terms.

Section Executed: Section 6(3) of the Transition Schedule provided:

"(3) All officers filling any office by election or appointment shall continue the duties thereof, until the end of the terms to which they were appointed or elected, and until their offices shall have been abolished or their successors selected and qualified in accordance with this Constitution or laws enacted pursuant thereto."

By letter of February 22, 1977, the Attorney General certified to the Secretary of State that section 6(3) had been fully executed:

"Section 6, subsection (3) of the Transition Schedule has been fully executed."

Preservation of Existing Water Rights: Plaintiff who had filed petition for water appropriation before repeal of the former water law had an existing right in the priority of his application, which was preserved by subsection (1) of Art. IX, sec. 3, Mont. Const., and by section 6(2) of the Transition Schedule of the 1972 Constitution. Gen. Agriculture Corp. v. Moore, 166 M 510, 534 P2d 859 (1975).

TITLE 1
GENERAL LAWS AND DEFINITIONS

CHAPTER 1
GENERAL PROVISIONS

Part 1
Meaning of Law

1-1-102. How expressed.

Case Notes

Written Law Supreme: The written law of this state is contained in its Constitution and statutes and the Constitution and statutes of the United States, and it prevails as against the declaration or promulgation by this court of an opposing rule at variance with and contrary to such written law. Purpose of Choice of Law Rule — Public Policy Subsumed: Addressing the question of whether, in a personal injury and wrongful death action, Montana recognized a public policy exception that would require application of Montana law even when Montana's choice of law rules dictate application of the laws of another state, the Supreme Court noted that for choice of law purposes, the public policy of a state is simply the rules, as expressed in its legislative enactments and judicial decisions, that it uses to decide controversies. The purpose of choice of law rules is to resolve conflicts between competing policies. In this case, considerations of public policy were accounted for, being expressly subsumed within the "most significant relationship" approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6(2)(b) and (2)(c) (1971), which mandate consideration of the relevant policies of all the interested states, so a public policy exception to the most significant relationship test would have been redundant. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and Rothwell v. Case Notes

Common-Law Action Not Usurped by Statutory Scheme for Environmental Remediation and Cleanup: Plaintiffs brought a common-law action against defendant for restoration damages related to environmental damage caused by defendant's refinery. Defendant asserted that the action would interfere with the statutory plan in the Comprehensive Environmental Cleanup and Responsibility Act (CECRA), Title 75, ch. 10, part 7, and contended that the common-law action was preempted by the statutory provisions. The Supreme Court disagreed. As set out in Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), statutory preemption of common-law claims is limited to situations in which there are a direct conflict between statutes and a common-law claim. However, nothing in CECRA preempts a common-law claim that seeks to recover restoration damages beyond the statutes' health-based standards, and the court declined to add to CECRA a prohibition against common-law claims when the Legislature declined to do so. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

State Law Tort Claims Not Protected or Prohibited by FELA — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper: Reidelbach worked for the railroad for about 20 years but was forced to stop working because of job-related disabling cumulative spinal injuries. Reidelbach reached an agreement with the railroad's claim representatives under which he would forego pursuing a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) and the railroad would propose a fair settlement for the injuries. After 2 years, no settlement was offered, and ultimately the parties exchanged counteroffers, but no agreement on an amount was reached. Reidelbach then filed a timely FELA claim and also brought several state claims, alleging that the railroad had engaged in unfair, dilatory, and fraudulent claims practices. The District Court concluded that all the postinjury state claims were preempted by FELA and dismissed them pursuant to former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), so Reidelbach appealed. Following an extensive analysis of federal law related to preemption in its various forms, the Supreme Court held that Reidelbach's state claims were neither expressly nor impliedly preempted by FELA and did not conflict with or stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of FELA. Therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing Reidelbach's state claims on grounds of FELA preemption, and the case was reversed and remanded for trial in state court. Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002).

Findings Required as Prerequisite for Involuntary Medication Order — Due Process and Right to Privacy — Common Law Superseded: S.C. was ordered by the District Court to undergo involuntary medication to treat her schizophrenia and appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the District Court violated her common-law right to refuse medication and her right to privacy and due process. S.C. also claimed that the District Court did not make the statutorily required finding stating the reason why involuntary medication was chosen by the District Court from among other alternatives available. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, holding that: (1) because there was a statutory scheme for ordering involuntary medication, there was no common-law right in Montana to refuse medication; (2) S.C.'s premise, that she had been unlawfully declared incompetent, was a false premise in that the statutory scheme required a finding of a mental disorder rather than incompetency and that S.C. had not particularly shown how the Montana commitment statutes were unconstitutional; and (3) it was clear from the detailed findings of the District Court that the court believed that involuntary medication was the most appropriate and least restrictive alternative. The Supreme Court also relied on the doctrine of implied findings to hold that the District Court had made all of the findings necessary to invoke the remedy of involuntary medication. In re Mental Health of S.C., 2000 MT 370, 303 M 444, 15 P3d 861, 57 St. Rep. 1584 (2000).

Claim for Common-Law Tort of Bad Faith by Third Party Not Preempted by Statute — General Statute of Limitations Applicable: The District Court dismissed Brewington's complaint against two insurance companies based on the conclusion that the complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because the claim was barred by the statute of limitations in 33-18-242 regarding third-party claimants. Brewington contended that the claim was based on the common-law tort of bad faith, not on 33-18-242. The Supreme Court construed the plain language of the statute in determining that by its terms, 33-18-242 does not prohibit a third-party claimant from bringing an action for bad faith. Both Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), and Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), establish a common-law cause of action for bad faith that was not affected by the passage of 33-18-242. When the common law is not in conflict with a statute, the common law applies. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that 33-18-242 prohibited Brewington from pleading the common-law tort of bad faith was reversible error. Further, because the claim was brought for bad faith and not pursuant to 33-18-242, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204, not the 1-year statute of limitations in 33-18-242, applied. Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237, 56 St. Rep. 1257 (1999), distinguishing Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

Common-Law Plain Error: Despite the clear language of this section precluding application of the common law in cases in which the law is declared by statute, the doctrine of common-law plain error review by the Montana Supreme Court continues to exist to allow correction of errors not objected to at trial but that affect the fairness, integrity, and public reputation of judicial proceedings. The doctrine continues in spite of the passage of 46-20-701, Montana's plain error statute restricting the review of errors not objected to at trial. Although failing to address the applicability of this section, the Supreme Court nevertheless retained the inherent power and obligation to interpret the constitution, protect individual rights, prevent manifest injustice, and correspondingly review lower court decisions and actions for error on a selective case-by-case basis, as inherent in the appellate process, despite the statutory restrictions and legislative intent of 46-20-701. St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208, 53 St. Rep. 310 (1996), followed in St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), St. v. Pizzichiello, 1999 MT 123, 294 M 436, 983 P2d 888, 56 St. Rep. 499 (1999), and St. v. Hanson, 1999 MT 226, 296 M 82, 988 P2d 299, 56 St. Rep. 891 (1999).

Prior Consent Judgment Not Conclusive as to Damages Against Liquidated Insurer — Res Judicata Inapplicable Under Statutory Scheme: When Dr. Lubin performed surgery on claimant in 1980, he was insured against professional malpractice by Glacier General Assurance Company. In 1984, Kowalski filed a suit against Dr. Lubin for medical malpractice. In 1985, Glacier General was declared insolvent and ordered into liquidation under the auspices of Bennett, the Montana Insurance Commissioner. In 1986, Bennett received a claim from Kowalski against Glacier General in compliance with 33-2-1365. In 1988, Kowalski concluded her litigation against Lubin by a settlement for $35,000. However, no release in favor of Lubin or Glacier General was executed. The insurer who insured Lubin prior to 1980 was to pay one-half of the settlement and Lubin the other half. The claim was referred to a referee of the District Court, who recommended that Bennett pay the entire claim of $35,000. Bennett objected to payment of more than one-half the claim, arguing that the issue was res judicata, based upon Kowalski's settlement with Lubin, but the District Court ordered Bennett to pay the entire $35,000. The Supreme Court held that while the doctrine of res judicata would normally apply, the doctrine did not apply under these circumstances because 33-2-1365 is inconsistent with the common law. Under 33-2-1365, the prior judgment did not conclusively establish the amount of Kowalski's damages caused by Glacier General, and payment of the entire amount of Kowalski's claim was therefore not barred by the consent judgment. In re Claim of Kowalski, 260 M 269, 860 P2d 104, 50 St. Rep. 1038 (1993).

Individuals as Well as Insurers Liable for Unfair Trade Practices: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The plaintiffs then sought damages from the insurer and the agent for bad faith in violation of the insurer's statutory duty to settle a claim when liability becomes reasonably clear. The agent argued that 33-18-242 limits liability for unfair trade practices to insurers. The Supreme Court held that that portion of Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065 (1983), holding that 33-18-201 did afford a plaintiff a common-law cause of action against individuals, had never been reversed or modified. The Supreme Court further held that the statutory cause of action provided for in 33-18-242 and the different standard of proof provided for by the statute apply only to insurers, while the common-law cause of action and standard of proof provided for by 33-18-201 apply to insurers and individuals. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993).

Quasi-Judicial Immunity as Common Law: The doctrine of quasi-judicial immunity is not a subject of statutory law, and the question of its applicability was therefore decided under the common-law rule as reviewed in Butz v. Economou, 438 US 478, 57 L Ed 2d 895, 98 S Ct 2894 (1978). The grant of judicial immunity in 2-9-112 is not in derogation of the right to sue the state, granted by Art. II, sec. 18, Mont. Const., and quasi-judicial immunity is therefore extended to state boards and to the state itself. Koppen v. Bd. of Medical Examiners, 233 M 214, 759 P2d 173, 45 St. Rep. 1433 (1988), distinguished in State ex rel. Div. of Workers' Comp. v. District Court, 246 M 225, 805 P2d 1272, 47 St. Rep. 1911 (1990), discussed in Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994), and followed in Rahrer v. Bd. of Psychologists, 2000 MT 9, 298 M 28, 993 P2d 680, 57 St. Rep. 53 (2000).

Noncompliance With Annexation Procedure — Property Not Subject to Municipal Tax: The city of Forsyth failed to substantially comply with the statutory annexation procedure, which supplanted common-law methods. Therefore, the disputed property taxed by the municipality was outside its jurisdiction and the plaintiffs' action for refund of taxes was remanded for consideration in conformity with such holding and the holding that under 27-2-203, the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run until plaintiffs discovered that the city map was in error. Gregory v. Forsyth, 187 M 132, 609 P2d 248 (1980).

Deannexation: Montana's deannexation statutes, 7-2-4801 through 7-2-4810, provide the exclusive means for excluding property from municipalities. The common-law doctrine of acquiescence cannot be applied to supersede the annexation statutes where the boundaries are clear. Balock v. Melstone, 186 M 303, 607 P2d 545 (1980).

Common-Law Action — Consortium: Wife can maintain action for loss of consortium when such loss is result of negligent injury to her husband because it is a mutual right which arises in husband and wife upon marriage. Duffy v. Lipsman-Fulkerson & Co., 200 F. Supp. 71 (D.C.

Mont. 1961), explained in Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963), distinguished in Hall v. U.S., 266 F. Supp. 671 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Implied Reservations and Implied Grants Based on Necessity — Outmoded by Statute: The effect of this section is that the common-law rules have been supplanted by statutory law in all fields covered by statute. Simonson v. McDonald, 131 M 494, 311 P2d 982 (1957).

Remedy Under Common Law and Statute: An occupying claimant may recoup the value of improvements placed on the land of another against the owner's claim for use and occupation under the common law as well as under 70-28-110. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

Meaning Not to Be Extended Far Beyond Its Remedial Purpose: To argue that the state by enacting 25-13-613 relating to property exempt from execution actually intended to exempt property used by the counties, cities, and towns from foreclosure of liens and to permit foreclosure upon property belonging to the state or used by the sovereign authority of the state for public purposes would be extending the meaning of this section far beyond any possible remedial purpose sought to be effected by its enactment. No such construction was ever intended, and the Legislature was laboring under some misapprehension that the sovereign power did not extend to counties, cities, and towns. Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (9th Cir. 1940).

Construing a Statutory Departure From the Common Law Under This and Other Sections on Construction: The court held a contract void because the impossibility preventing performance was due to the nature of the thing the contracting company undertook to do, i.e., to obtain a yield of gasoline which could not by any means be done. The court rejected appellee's contention that under 1-1-109 the common-law rule that the promise was enforceable because the company knew or had reason to know the facts disclosing the impossibility applied. On the contrary, 28-2-603, voiding the contract for impossibility and declaring the law and departing from the common-law rule (section 10704, R.C.M. 1935, since repealed), is the only section that could apply. Smith Eng'r Co. v. Rice, 102 F2d 492 (9th Cir. 1938).

Statutes Construed as Continuation of Common Law: Statutes are but continuations of basic common law and are not presumed to make any alterations in it further than is expressly declared, and a statute made in the affirmative to define a right, without any negative implications expressed or implied, does not detract from the common law, the rules of which are not to be overturned except by clear and unambiguous language. State ex rel. La Point v. District Court, 69 M 29, 220 P 88 (1923).

Elements of Common-Law Marriage Modified by Codes: Montana's codes have modified the common law with respect to marriage by requiring in the absence of solemnization a mutual and public assumption of the marital relation. St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923).

Interference With Contractual Rights — Unknown at Common Law: When a right sought to be asserted was not known to the common law at the time it became part of the jurisprudence of the state, authority for the right must be found in the acts of the Legislature. Court found a cause of action for interference with contractual rights based in part on the doctrine that "for every wrong there is a remedy". Simonsen v. Barth, 64 M 95, 208 P 938 (1922).

Public Debts — Priority: By adopting the common law, the state adopted the crown's prerogative with respect to public debts, and the state as sovereign is entitled to priority of payment over private creditors of the same debtor. Am. Bonding Co. v. Reynolds, 203 F 356 (D.C. Mont. 1913).

Legislature's Power to Alter or Repeal the Common Law: The Legislature may alter or repeal the common law, and many of its rules have been abolished by the Codes. Cunningham v. NW. Improvement Co., 44 M 180, 119 P 554 (1911).

Common Counts: There is in this state no action for money had and received as such, and there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Code. Truro v. Passmore, 38 M 544, 100 P 966 (1909).

Writs of Attachment to Be Issued Under Judicial Supervision: Montana recognizes the existence of common law but only insofar as it does not conflict with specific statutory enactments. Montana has established statutory procedures for attaching property. The petition must be supported by an affidavit of the person seeking attachment. The petitioner must furnish a written undertaking to be approved by a court. Finally, a judge, not the petitioner, issues the Writ of Attachment. Prejudgment common-law Writs of Attachment are not issued under judicial supervision. This directly conflicts with the statutory requirements of Montana's prejudgment attachment laws. Thus, common-law Writs of Attachment, issued without judicial supervision, are of no effect in Montana. 38 A.G. Op. 115 (1980).

No Duty for County Clerk and Recorder to Accept Common-Law Liens for Filing: Although a County Clerk and Recorder has a statutory duty to accept for filing any instrument, paper, or notice authorized by law to be recorded, there is no apparent authority in Montana law for allowing the filing of a common-law lien. It is unclear whether Montana even recognizes common-law liens. Because a common-law lien is not authorized by law to be received, County Clerk and Recorders may refuse to accept for filing written instruments purporting to be liens when the writing does not qualify as a statutory lien or lien created by contract. 38 A.G. Op. 114 (1980).

Irrigation Ditch as a "Natural Stream": An irrigation ditch established prior to the existence of a public street that intersects the ditch is considered a natural stream as to that street under common law. Consequently, such a ditch must also be considered a natural stream within the meaning of 7-14-2204(1). 38 A.G. Op. 39 (1979).

1-1-109. Common law of England — when rule of decision.

Action for Damages Allowed Against Local Peace Officers Violating Person's Self-Executing State Constitutional Rights to Privacy, Due Process, and Freedom From Unreasonable Searches and Seizures: Plaintiffs filed a civil action against the Sheriff and two deputies for damages for violation of plaintiffs' Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. The court held that those three rights are self-executing. The court also held that plaintiffs were entitled to damages. The court based the right to recover damages on: (1) federal cases allowing damage suits for violation of rights under the U.S. Constitution; (2) Restatement (Second) of Torts 874A (1979), which follows the principle in those federal cases by stating that when a constitutional provision protects a class of persons and does not provide a remedy for a violation of the provision, the court may, if appropriate, allow an action under an existing tort or a new cause of action similar to an existing tort; (3) this section providing that the common law of England is the rule of decision in Montana courts to the extent that it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the U.S. or Montana Constitution or Montana statutes, and cases from other states using the English common law as a basis for granting a remedy for a state official's violation of a person's state constitutional rights; (4) 27-1-202 allowing recovery of damages by a person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another; and (5) the Montana Constitution, Art. II, sec. 16, right to a remedy for every injury. The court stated that there is a great distinction between wrongs, such as assault, conversion, and trespass, by a private individual against another private individual and wrongs against a private individual by a person acting under authority of the state in violation of a person's constitutional rights and stated that common-law causes of action remedying the former are not adequate to remedy the latter. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Legislative Power to Alter Common Law: No one has a vested interest in any rule of common law. The Legislature may alter common-law causes of action to promote legitimate state interests and may alter or abrogate causes of action sounding in tort. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989).

Common-Law Duties — Attorney General: The common law has been a part of our system of jurisprudence from the organization of Montana territory to the present day, and in absence of express restrictions, the common-law duties attach themselves to the office of Attorney General so far as they are applicable and in harmony with our system of government. State ex rel. Ford v. Young, 54 M 401, 170 P 947 (1918).

Definition of "Common Law of England": The common law of England means that body of jurisprudence as applied and modified by the courts of this country up to the time it became a rule of decision in this commonwealth. Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918).

Common-Law Rule of Contempt of Court — Relation to Freedom of the Press: When publication of an article in newspaper charged a judge with wrongdoing in connection with his decision in a case 6 months prior, contempt of court for publication of article will not lie. When a case is finished, courts are subject to the same criticism as other people. State ex rel. Metcalf v. District Court, 52 M 46, 155 P 278 (1916).

Publication on Sunday: Although the common-law rule held that Sunday was not a judicial day, it had no application whatever to ministerial acts. Therefore publication of notice in a newspaper is not vitiated because it was done in a Sunday paper. State ex rel. Hays v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914).

State Preferred Creditor: By adopting the common law, the state adopted the crown's prerogative with respect to public debts, and the state as sovereign is entitled to priority of payment over private creditors of the same debtor. Am. Bonding Co. v. Reynolds, 203 F 356 (D.C. Mont. 1913).

Common-Law Determination of Floodwaters as Part of Surface Water: Whenever floodwater becomes severed from main current or leaves never to return and spreads out over lower ground, it becomes surface water. However, if it forms a continuous body with the water flowing in the ordinary channel or if it departs from such channel presently to return, it is to be regarded as still a part of the stream and may not be obstructed by a railroad company by a fill along its right-of-way without openings. Fordham v. N. Pac. Ry., 30 M 421, 76 P 1040 (1904).

Burden of Proof: In the absence of a statute fixing the burden of proof, the common-law rule prevails. Finlen v. Heinze, 28 M 548, 73 P 123 (1903).

Case Notes

State as a Person: The state was properly held to be a "person" where such construction of the statute was beneficial to the state and general public by permitting recovery of limited amounts paid through ADC for the support and necessaries of children. Dept. of Social & Rehabilitation Services v. Hultgren, 168 M 257, 541 P2d 1211 (1975).

Logging Corporation Not a Person: A logging corporation acting in the capacity of an independent contractor is not a "person" as set forth in 71-3-601 and is not entitled to a loggers' lien thereunder. Jack Long Logging Co. v. Pyramid Mtn. Lumber, Inc., 143 M 87, 387 P 712 (1963).

Corporation as a Person: Though the term "person" ordinarily refers to a living human being—a natural person—the definition given it by this section and other sections of the Codes includes corporations as well as natural persons. In re Beck's Estate, 44 M 561, 121 P 784 (1912).

Case Notes

Adequate Definition of "Security" for Jury — Willful Conduct Standard Applicable to Securities Act Violations — Omission of Investment Prospectus Not Fraudulent at Time — Securities Restitution Properly Awarded: The defendant, a pastor, was approached by the plaintiff, a member of his congregation, about investing money. The defendant convinced the plaintiff to purchase stock in the defendant's Mexico-domiciled company. Ultimately, the investment promises never materialized and the defendant was convicted of failure to register as a securities salesperson, failure to register a security, and fraudulent practices under the Securities Act of Montana. On appeal, the defendant argued that the term "security" was not adequately or specifically defined for the jury, that the "willful" standard was inappropriate to attach to the charges, that the conviction of fraudulent practices was improper because neither the statute nor administrative rule required an investment prospectus at the time of the violation, and that the award of restitution was improper. The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that the jury reasonably concluded that the defendant had sold a security because the shares in the company constituted a stock, that the Legislature specifically included a willful standard for Securities Act violations, that the fraudulent practices conviction was improper because failure to provide a prospectus was not part of the statute at the time, and that the award of restitution was proper because the loss stemmed directly from the defendant's conduct. St. v. Himes, 2015 MT 91, 378 Mont. 419, 345 P.3d 297.

Student Not Subject to Restraint on Liberty — No Custodial or Special Relationship: A high school student was caught on campus with a tin of chewing tobacco and was disciplined by being suspended from all extracurricular activities. The student became distraught upon realizing the suspension would bar him from the state wrestling tournament; he went home and committed suicide that afternoon. The student's mother sued the school board and the superintendent, alleging that her son's death was the direct and proximate result of the school board's negligence. The District Court granted summary judgment to the board. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because suicide is generally considered a deliberate intervening act, the board was entitled to summary judgment. Because the student had no history of mental health problems, the suicide was unforeseeable, and therefore the board owed no legal duty to the student. Additionally, the mother could not show a special relationship between the student and the school board because the board had no obligation to exercise custodial care over the student, who was not in the custody of the board and was in his own home when he committed suicide. Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

No Malice in Cooperating With Insurance Fraud Investigation — Summary Judgment Proper: Sherner was charged with felony theft by common scheme for defrauding an insurer. Sherner subsequently sued the insurer for malicious prosecution. The District Court concluded that the insurer was immune from civil liability pursuant to 33-1-1210 and summarily dismissed the claim, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The court applied the definition of malice in this section to 33-1-1210, concluding that the insurer did not act with malice in investigating the claim against Sherner. Absent a showing of malice, the insurer was not subject to liability for cooperating with an investigation of insurance fraud, so summary judgment for defendants was proper. Sherner v. Nat'l Loss Control Serv. Corp., 2005 MT 284, 329 M 247, 124 P3d 150 (2005).

Sufficient Evidence of City's Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff's negligence claim was precluded by 70-16-302, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city's failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff's negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

No Showing of Malicious Act or Omission by Coworker in Death of Employee — Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Doctrine Applicable under 1999 Statute: Under the 1999 version of 39-71-413 and Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), a plaintiff was required to show both an intentional and malicious act or omission in order to avoid the workers' compensation exclusivity doctrine (revised in 2001 to require only the showing of an intentional act or omission). Here Everhard, a mine worker, was killed by a train driven by Aafedt after signaling that Aafedt could proceed. Everhard's estate sued Aafedt and the mining company. The District Court concluded that Aafedt's conduct was intentional when he moved the train without seeing Everhard, but there was no showing that Everhard suffered an injury caused by actual malice by Aafedt or the company, so summary judgment was granted to defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed. As a matter of law, it could not be said that Aafedt deliberately proceeded to act in conscious or intentional disregard or even indifference to the high probability of injury to Everhard under the definition of actual malice, so the estate failed to overcome the workers' compensation exclusive remedy rule, and summary judgment was proper. Blain v. Stillwater Min. Co., 2004 MT 141, 321 M 403, 92 P3d 4 (2004).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

Erroneous Conclusion That Elements of Malicious Prosecution by State Not Established — Judgment as Matter of Law Improper: Plaintiffs were cited by the state for various water quality violations related to their public swimming pools, drinking water, and discharge from a sewage lagoon. The charges were ultimately dropped, and both plaintiffs filed separate actions that were settled, except for plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claims against the state, which were joined for trial by jury. At the close of plaintiffs' case, the state's motion for judgment as a matter of law was granted, so plaintiffs appealed. As set out in Orser v. St., 178 M 126, 582 P2d 1227 (1978), in a civil action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must introduce sufficient proof of the following elements: (1) a judicial proceeding has been commenced and prosecuted against the plaintiff; (2) the defendant was responsible for litigating, prosecuting, or continuing the proceeding; (3) there is lack of probable cause for the defendant's acts; (4) the defendant was actuated by malice; (5) the proceeding terminated in favor of the plaintiff; and (6) the plaintiff suffered damages. Here, the District Court found that plaintiffs had not met their burden of proof regarding elements three, four, and five. The Supreme Court examined each of those elements—lack of probable cause, malice, and favorable termination of the underlying suit—and concluded that the elements were met, warranting reversal for trial on the merits. Judgment as a matter of law averts trial by jury and is proper only in rare cases when undisputed evidence admits of only one conclusion. Although the proceedings to date in this case did not demonstrate guilt or innocence, plaintiffs nevertheless made out a prima facie case that warranted jury determination. Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), following McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979), Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126 (1982), and Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), and followed in Seipel v. Olympic Coast Investments, 2008 MT 237, 344 M 415, 188 P3d 1027 (2008).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000), followed, with regard to appropriateness of summary judgment on issues of negligence, in Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988), and Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666 (1996).

No Duty Constituting Negligence When Danger or Risk Unforeseeable — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Material Fact Regarding Legal Duty: The father could not reasonably foresee that, by giving his child permission to go to a friend's house to play, the child would go to the house of a different friend, participate along with other children in burning a photograph using gasoline, and be burned when another friend accidentally kicked the container of flaming gasoline onto his child. The duty element of negligence turns primarily on foreseeability, and if a reasonably prudent defendant can foresee neither any danger of direct injury nor any risk from an intervening cause, there is no negligence. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment, but in this case, reasonable minds could not differ regarding the absence of material fact regarding any duty owed by the father, so summary judgment was proper as a matter of law. Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), following Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in this section—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971), and Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Reckless Driving — No Requirement for Evidence of Serious Injury — Jury Instruction Properly Refused: Stanko was charged with two counts of reckless driving, one for driving 117 miles an hour on U.S. 87 and the other for driving 121 miles an hour on the same highway, over the crest of a hill. At the conclusion of his trial, Stanko submitted a jury instruction that read: ""Willful or Wanton Disregard" means that the defendant had an intentional lack of regard concerning the safety of others, or that he intentionally did something with knowledge that serious injury is a probable result." The District Court refused Stanko's instruction in favor of the state's instruction, which did not mention serious injury. The Supreme Court noted that it reviews jury instructions to see whether the instructions, as a whole, fully and fairly instruct the jury on the law applicable to the case and also pointed out that the District Court has broad discretion when it instructs the jury. Using these standards, the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly refused Stanko's instruction. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 323, 292 M 214, 974 P2d 1139, 55 St. Rep. 1313 (1998).

Parole Officer Duty of Care to Supervise Parolees — Jury Instruction Properly Given: Corliss was paroled, after serving time for an execution-style slaying with a handgun, under the condition that he not possess a firearm. While on a visit, with the approval of his parole officer, to Washington state to look for work, Corliss failed to return to Montana within the established time, failed to see a parole officer in Washington, had a temporary restraining order obtained against him by a girlfriend because of threats made to her and her family, and had an altercation with his wife involving a handgun. In neither instance of violence did Corliss's parole officer investigate the circumstances of the violence. Later, Corliss shot and killed one friend of his girlfriend and injured another. Both the estates of the deceased woman and the wounded woman brought actions against the state for negligent supervision of Corliss's parole. The state objected to an instruction given by the District Court concerning a parole officer's duty of care, claiming that there must be some special relationship between the parole officer and the person injured by a parolee in order for a duty of care to arise. The Supreme Court reviewed statutes defining negligence, statutes describing the general duty of one individual toward another, and statutes concerning parole and concluded that Robbins had a general duty to exercise reasonable care in the supervision of Corliss and had a duty to the killed and injured women in particular.

Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Duty of Care of Firearm Owner — Independent Intervening Criminal and Negligent Acts as Superseding Firearm Owner's Negligent Breach of Duty: An 11-year-old boy died as the result of a gunshot wound inflicted with a handgun stolen by the boy and three friends from under the seat of Susanj's vehicle. The boy's mother brought a negligence action against Susanj, claiming that his act of leaving the vehicle unattended and unlocked in a public thoroughfare contributed to the boy's death. The District Court summarily dismissed the action after determining that Susanj owed no legal duty to the boy because: (1) Susanj was unaware of previous thefts in the area that would compel him to lock his vehicle; (2) Susanj did not allow entry into the vehicle; (3) Susanj did not have an open display of the firearm that would lure the boys into the vehicle to steal the weapon; and (4) the boy was not an innocent party, but rather a participant in the burglary. However, the Supreme Court held that given the foreseeability of the risk involved in the improper and unsafe use and storage of a firearm and the strong policy considerations favoring safe and prudent use and storage, as a matter of law, a firearm owner has a duty to the general public to use and store a firearm in a safe and prudent manner, taking into consideration the type of firearm, whether it is loaded or unloaded, whether the ammunition is in close proximity or easily attainable, and the location and circumstances of its use and storage. Susanj's failure to exercise ordinary care in storing a dangerous instrumentality like a loaded handgun and ammunition under the seat of his unlocked vehicle constituted a breach of the duty of care. However, the boys' two intervening criminal acts of theft from the vehicle and the intervening grossly negligent act of one boy waving the gun around with his finger on the trigger and trying to unload the gun while high on marijuana were reasonably unforeseeable and cut off all liability on Susanj's part for the boy's death. Summary dismissal of the negligence action was proper based on the independent superseding criminal and grossly negligent acts. Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996), citing Prosser and Keaton on Torts 33, 34, and 44 and Restatement (Second) of Torts (1965) 298 and 302B, following Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985), Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755 (1992), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), overruling Lencioni v. Long, 139 M 135, 361 P2d 455 (1961), Brown v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Great Falls, 154 M 79, 460 P2d 97 (1969), and Schafer v. St., 181 M 102, 592 P2d 493 (1979), to the extent that those cases hold that no recovery can be allowed for an injury that results from an intervening act of a third party, overruling that portion of King v. St., 259 M 393, 856 P2d 954 (1993), stating that if a plaintiff's injury is caused by the intervening acts of a third party, the defendant's actions cannot be viewed as the proximate cause of the injury, and distinguished in Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999).

Foreseeability to Be Considered Part of Analysis of Duty: The trial court refused to give Columbus Hospital's proposed jury instruction on proximate cause and also did not instruct the jury on foreseeability even though the hospital contended that the Supreme Court had included foreseeability as an element of proximate cause in Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court, after a lengthy discussion of duty, proximate cause, and foreseeability and after examining the statutory definitions of duty and proximate cause, held that foreseeability is to be considered as part of the analysis of duty rather than proximate cause. The Supreme Court further held that it was reversing that part of Kitchen Krafters that requires a two-tiered analysis of causation that includes consideration of foreseeability in cases other than those cases in which there has been an allegation that the chain of causation is severed by an independent, intervening cause. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996), followed in Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999), Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), and Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Malice as Applied to Intentional Injury: The definition of actual malice in 27-1-221, adopted in 1987 for purposes of punitive damages, did not change the standard used to determine whether an injury was intentional for purposes of the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act. The definition of malice in this section is still applicable to workers' compensation cases. Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993).

Negligence Action for Failure to Prevent Suicide — General Rule — Exceptions: Plaintiff brought a wrongful death action founded on negligence for failure of defendant to prevent the suicide of plaintiff's uncle. Regarding civil liability for suicide, the Supreme Court expressly adopted the general rule set out in 41 ALR 4th 353 that negligence actions for the suicide of another will generally not lie because the act of suicide is considered a deliberate intervening act exonerating the defendant from legal responsibility. The two narrow exceptions deal with: (1) causing another to commit suicide; and (2) allowing the imposition of a duty to prevent suicide but only in a custodial situation where suicide is foreseeable. A landlord-tenant relationship did not meet the criteria for establishing a custodial relationship. Krieg v. Massey, 239 M 469, 781 P2d 277, 46 St. Rep. 1839 (1989). See also Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Creation of Snow Cloud Not Negligence: A claim was properly dismissed for failure to state a cause of action when parties involved in an automobile accident, occurring when their vision was obscured while following a snowplow, attempted to sue the unknown snowplow driver for negligence. The Supreme Court cited Merithew v. Hill, 167 F. Supp. 320 (D.C. Mont. 1958), in holding that creation of a snow cloud, in itself, did not constitute negligence. Wilson v. Doe, 228 M 42, 740 P2d 687, 44 St. Rep. 1326 (1987), followed in Hatch v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 188, 887 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 1512 (1994).

No Comparison Between Negligence and Willful or Wanton Misconduct: Defendant and plaintiff, who was 16, were drinking and driving at a high rate of speed in Anaconda. Defendant was driving plaintiff's car when he lost control and hit a house. Plaintiff was severely injured. The District Court instructed the jury that plaintiff's recovery could not be reduced by his contributory negligence if defendant was guilty of willful or wanton misconduct. The Supreme Court upheld the giving of the instruction, saying that willful and wanton misconduct differs in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care. The term "negligence" in the comparative negligence statutes does not encompass willful or wanton misconduct, and in an action based on such conduct the comparative negligence statute is inapplicable and the plaintiff's own contributory negligence should not reduce his recovery. Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983).

Trailer Swinging Into Wrong Lane When Driver Swerves to Avoid Collision — No Negligence — No New Trial: Undisputed evidence showed plaintiff was partly in defendant's lane on two-lane road while driving through a curve and that the defendant responded by swerving to the right to avoid a head-on collision. The swerve caused a trailer that defendant was hauling behind his tractor-trailer truck to swing into plaintiff's lane and collide with plaintiff. There was no evidence that defendant was driving unsafely prior to that or that he was in any way negligent. Defendant acted reasonably and prudently, and plaintiff's actions supported a finding that he was the proximate cause of his injuries. The jury verdict found defendant was not negligent. It was an abuse of discretion and reversible error for the court to grant plaintiff a new trial, for there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 668 P2d 228, 40 St. Rep. 1349 (1983).

Negligence in Performing Contractual Duty — No Privity Required: A prime contractor contracted separately with a steel supplier to supply steel and with a subcontractor to erect the steel. Because the supplier was delayed in delivering the steel, the subcontractor suffered financial losses. The subcontractor could properly maintain an action against the supplier for negligence in the performance of its duties arising out of the steel supply contract with the prime contractor. Privity of contract was not required. Hawthorne v. Kober Constr. Co., 196 M 519, 640 P2d 467, 39 St. Rep. 294 (1982), followed in Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986), and Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), in which it was held that a third-party contractor may successfully recover for purely economic loss against a project engineer or architect when the design professional knew or should have foreseen that the particular plaintiff or an identifiable class of plaintiffs was at risk in relying on the information supplied.

Duty of Jailer to Prisoner — Negligence: A jailer owes a duty to the prisoner to keep him safe and to protect him from unnecessary harm. Reasonable and ordinary care must be exercised for the life and health of the prisoner. A jailer is not liable to a prisoner in his keeping for injuries resulting from the prisoner's own intentional conduct. Absent special circumstances, a jailer is under no duty to prevent the prisoner from taking his own life. Once the jailer knows or should know of the suicidal tendencies of a prisoner, a duty arises to provide reasonable care necessary to prevent the prisoner from committing suicide. This rule applies whether the prisoner is mentally anguished, helplessly intoxicated, or temporarily insane because of conditions forced upon him by the jailer. Without a showing of "special circumstances" that would elevate the jailer's duty of care and thereby create the possibility that his acts were a proximate cause of the prisoner's death, the District Court was required to follow the general rule that suicide is an intentional act, and the jailer was not liable for the death. Pretty On Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979), followed in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Elements of Negligence: In tort law, actionable negligence arises only from a breach of legal duty, and to sustain an action for damages resulting from negligence, the complaint must allege the duty, its break, the damages, and that the breach of duty was a proximate cause of the injury. Pretty On Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979).

Foreseeability of Injury in Negligence: A defendant who could not reasonably foresee any danger of direct injury resulting from his conduct or any risk from an intervening force is not negligent. Pretty On Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979).

Duty Owed to Invitee or Employee: A possessor of land is not liable to his invitees for physical harm caused to them by any activity or condition on the land whose danger is known or obvious to them, unless the possessor should anticipate the harm despite such knowledge or obviousness. Although the invitee or employee may be under a duty to avoid harm likely to result to him from open and obvious dangers, he may not be in a position to fully appreciate the risk or to avoid danger even though aware of it. Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979).

Foreseeability in Negligence: Foreseeability is a limit on liability for acts that might under other circumstances be negligent. A defendant who could not reasonably foresee any danger of injury from his conduct or any risk from an intervening force is not negligent. Schafer v. St., 181 M 102, 592 P2d 493 (1979), overruled, to the extent that this case holds that no recovery can be allowed for an injury that results from an intervening act of a third party, in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996).

Doctor Not Guarantor of Result: Without express and proved warranty, a doctor is not a guarantor and must only possess the skill and learning possessed by the average member of his profession in the community and to use those skills and learning in a reasonable and prudent manner. Llera v. Wisner, 171 M 254, 557 P2d 805 (1976).

Willfulness: For an act to be "willful", malicious motive or intent is not necessary. Erickson v. Fisher, 170 M 491, 554 P2d 1336 (1976).

Negligence — Powerline Clearance: Although powerline clearance above a mobile home was in violation of minimum standards for clearance under the National Safety Code, the plaintiff knew of the height of the wires and in coming into contact with them failed in his duty to use his faculties to observe and avoid obvious danger, and that negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries. Turley v. Mont. Power Co., 167 M 39, 534 P2d 1254 (1975).

Negligence:

Negligence imports a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns, and where a woman permitted a person who held himself out as a repairman to write a check which she signed in such a way as the amount could be raised and the woman's husband knew that the woman had permitted others to write checks but he did not do anything to stop that practice, both the woman and her husband were negligent. Williams v. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman, 167 M 24, 534 P2d 1247 (1975).

"Negligence is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done", and where plaintiff's property was damaged by the dropping of fire retardant from airplanes and at the trial he failed to show the lack of due care under the circumstances, the trial court properly nonsuited plaintiff upon defendant's motion. Stocking v. Johnson Flying Serv., 143 M 61, 387 P2d 312 (1963).

Breach of a Duty — Negligence: In action to recover damages for reduced yield of dryland alfalfa seed allegedly caused by negligence of defendant in allowing weeds from defendant's field to blow across fields of plaintiff during windstorm, trial court erred by not directing verdict for defendant since evidence failed to show breach of duty by defendant and therefore did not establish prima facie case of negligence. Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), explained in Ekwortzel v. Parker, 156 M 477, 482 P2d 559 (1971), and followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996).

Malice:

Where defendant's workmen in digging ditch negligently struck sewerline and left it open overnight so that sewage seeped into the basement of plaintiff's motel, but when notified of the damage workmen did everything they could to help clear out basement, there was not sufficient evidence of willful conduct to warrant an instruction to the jury under 27-1-221 on exemplary damages. Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966).

The institution of a criminal proceeding for passing a fraudulent check, which was in fact good, in order to collect on the check, was a malicious act. Rickman v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 124 M 451, 227 P2d 607 (1951).

Res Ipsa Loquitur: Res ipsa loquitur does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of proving actionable negligence, nor is it sufficient that he show that he was injured and that the instrumentality which caused his injury was in the control of the defendant. He must also show that the accident would not have occurred in the ordinary course of events if the defendant had exercised due care. Stocking v. Johnson Flying Serv., 143 M 61, 387 P2d 312 (1963).

Case Notes

Invested Money Not Considered Article of Personal Property in Probate: In his will, Bjerke listed items of personal property and the persons to whom they were bequeathed and provided that any item of personal property not listed was determined to be a household item bequeathed to plaintiff. Plaintiff maintained that money was personal property and that because Bjerke's money was not on the list, all money should go to plaintiff as contents of the house. The District Court found that the ordinary words of the will indicated that Bjerke did not intend to include money invested outside the home as personal property and that plaintiff was thus entitled only to cash found in the home. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, personal property includes money, but that the doctrine of ejusdem generis should be applied in interpreting the will. Under the doctrine, general words may be limited in their application to items of a similar class, as exemplified by the more specific and particular words preceding in the general phrase, focusing on what is specifically listed and not on what is omitted. In reading Bjerke's will as a whole, it was clear that he was contemplating that only tangible goods pass to plaintiff. The District Court correctly determined that cash was an item of personal property, but that invested money was not. Hanson v. Estate of Bjerke, 2004 MT 200, 322 M 280, 95 P3d 704 (2004). No Standing to Recover Damages by Party Not Owner of Property — Fax Not Considered Valid Assignment of Damage Claim: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a complaint seeking compensation from the companies. Dale's parents eventually filed for bankruptcy, and the Lewises finally became the owners of record in 1998. When the companies discovered that the Lewises were not the owners of the inn at the time that the suit was filed, they moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court on grounds that the Lewises had no standing to assert a claim for damages arising before they acquired title. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the general rule that persons cannot recover for damages to property that they do not own. Further, even though property damage claims have long been recognized as assignable, the fax did not meet the statutory requirements of a valid assignment and was unenforceable. Thus, on the issue of prepurchase damages, no material question of fact existed regarding ownership or assignment, so the Lewises had no standing to bring a claim for damages prior to their ownership of the inn. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

"Any Property Owned": It was reversible error for District Court to limit the meaning of the term "any property", as used in 69-5-107, which grants electricity suppliers the right to supply electric service to "any property" they own, to commercial or industrial property, for the term's meaning is not ambiguous and is plain and certain. By this section, the word "property" means real and personal property wherever used in this Code. Tongue River Elec. Co-op, Inc., v. Mont. Power Co., 195 M 511, 636 P2d 862, 38 St. Rep. 2032 (1981).

Property: Under this section, "property", as used in 70-16-302, includes both real and personal property. State ex rel. Tucker v. District Court, 155 M 202, 468 P2d 773 (1970).

Prescription and Adverse Possession: The doctrine of prescription pertains to acquisition of a nonpossessory interest while the doctrine of adverse possession pertains to the acquisition of a possessory interest. The two terms are entirely different, but the interests are determined in a similar manner. Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963).

Real Property: The Legislature has classed an unpatented quartz lode mining claim as real estate and has provided the same remedies for the protection and enforcement of rights pertaining to it, with the same forms of procedure, as it has provided for the protection and enforcement of rights pertaining to other real estate. State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 330, 61 P 882 (1900).

Attorney General's Opinions

"Property" to Include Real and Personal Property: The term "property" as used in 7-33-2109 applies to all forms of real and personal property ordinarily subject to ad valorem taxation by counties. 42 A.G. Op. 109 (1988).

Case Notes

Venue for Parenting Plan Proper Where Filed — Transfer of Venue Improper: The grandmother filed a petition for a parenting plan in Flathead County, where she and the child resided. The mother filed a motion for a change of venue to Hill County, where she resided. The District Court granted the change of venue, believing that 1-1-215 required the change in venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the change of venue, ruling that under 40-4-211 venue was proper in either county. In re S.C.B., 2015 MT 19, 378 Mont. 89, 342 P.3d 46.

Jurisdiction of Montana Courts Over Wrongful Discharge Case Involving Montana Citizen When Montana Law Applies — Dismissal for Lack of Jurisdiction Reversed: Plaintiff was a Montana resident hired by a Florida corporation, which was operated out of Oklahoma, to lay fiber optic cable throughout the country. While working in Indiana, plaintiff had a dispute with a supervisor and was fired. Plaintiff brought an action in Montana, claiming a violation of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court held that under 39-2-912, the Montana courts lacked subject matter jurisdiction and dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Even though plaintiff never signed a written employment contract, the court held that a contract provision may be broad enough to indicate that an entire contract be governed by the laws of the state governing the particular provision. The fact that the defendant corporation paid income taxes, unemployment insurance premiums, and wages in Montana indicated an intent to be governed by Montana law. The court also concluded that under sections 187 and 188 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971), the local law of the state with the most significant relationship to the transaction applies to questions of contract interpretation absent an effective choice of law by the parties. Plaintiff was considered a Montana resident despite the fact that employment required travel to other states, and the court concluded that it was appropriate to apply the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act to the case even though the Act does not expressly provide for extraterritorial jurisdiction. Montana courts have subject matter jurisdiction in cases involving a Montana resident when Montana law applies, so plaintiff's case should not have been dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Burchett v. MasTec N. America, Inc., 2004 MT 177, 322 M 93, 93 P3d 1247 (2004). See also Dailey v. Transitron Electronic Corp., 475 F2d 12 (5th Cir. 1973), and Harrington v. Energy West, Inc., 2015 MT 233, 380 Mont. 298, 356 P.3d 441.

No Dual Residency in Montana Despite Joint Custody Provisions — Affidavit Indicating Future Residency Intent Irrelevant: When the parties were divorced in Nevada, physical custody of their child was granted to the mother, who continued to reside with the child in Nevada, and Umland moved to Montana, having been granted visitation rights. When the child died in an automobile accident, Umland attempted to collect a settlement under his insurance policy, which provided coverage for relatives who were residents of the insured's household. As proof that the child was a resident of Montana, Umland submitted an affidavit asserting that the child had indicated an intent to reside with Umland. The District Court disallowed the affidavit and held that the policy did not apply because the child was not a resident. On appeal, Umland argued that because this section establishes a minor's residence as the residence of the parent having legal custody and because Montana allows for joint custody, it naturally followed that Montana allows dual residency. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law provides that there may be only one residence. The child customarily resided with the mother and thus was a Nevada resident. Further, the affidavit indicating the child's intent to reside in Montana in the future was irrelevant because the child was a Nevada resident at the time of death. Umland v. Nat'l Cas. Co., 2003 MT 356, 319 M 16, 81 P3d 500 (2003).

Person Not in Residence on Mortgaged Property Not Entitled to Possession During Statutory Redemption Period: Halseth defaulted on several promissory notes, so Independence Bank filed a foreclosure action on Halseth's property in Blaine County. At trial, Halseth contended that because he was currently residing on the property, he was entitled to possession of the property during the 1-year redemption period following the foreclosure sale. Although Halseth maintained a residence in Harlem, he testified that he had moved a camper trailer to the Blaine County property for the sole purpose of establishing his right to retain the property during the redemption period. The District Court applied the definition of residence in this section, and determined that Halseth resided in Harlem, not on the Blaine County property, and that he was therefore not entitled to retain possession during the redemption period. Halseth appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's findings. Even though he moved the camper trailer to Blaine County, Halseth retained ties to the Harlem residence and did not intend to relinquish it. Absent a demonstration of the union of act and intent necessary to change permanent residence from Harlem to Blaine County, Halseth could not be said to reside at the Blaine County property and was not entitled to retain possession of the property during the redemption period. Independence Bank v. Halseth, 2002 MT 100, 309 M 398, 46 P3d 657 (2002).

Residency Requirements for Obtaining Hunting or Fishing License Not Unconstitutionally Vague: Britton was charged in Justice's Court with various hunting license-related crimes, but moved for dismissal on grounds that Montana's residency laws are so vague as to violate due process. The motion was denied. Following conviction, Britton asserted in District Court that 87-2-102, defining residency for hunting and fishing license purposes, is vague because other statutes define residency differently for purposes such as voting, dissolution of marriage, college attendance, and taxation. The District Court held that fish and game residency requirements are neither vague nor ambiguous and affirmed the Justice's Court conviction. On appeal, Britton asserted that the various statutory definitions of residency might confuse a person of ordinary intelligence and operate as a trap for the innocent. However, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the other statutory residency provisions to which Britton referred clearly provide that those provisions are for specific acts or purposes other than obtaining a hunting license and that it strained credulity to suggest that a person of ordinary intelligence would be confused into thinking that any of those statutes define residency for the purpose of obtaining a hunting license. Britton failed to establish that the residency requirements for obtaining a hunting or fishing license are facially unconstitutional on vagueness grounds. St. v. Britton, 2001 MT 141, 306 M 24, 30 P3d 337 (2001).

Burden of Proof on Moving Party Seeking Change of Venue — Error in Shifting Burden of Proof Regarding Residency to Nonmoving Party: Lockhead and Weinstein were involved in an altercation in Missoula. Lockhead subsequently filed a motion in Silver Bow County seeking damages from Weinstein for defamation, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and malicious prosecution. In the complaint, Lockhead alleged that he resided in Butte. Weinstein then moved for a change of venue to Missoula, contending that Lockhead was actually a resident of Missoula rather than Silver Bow County and that the trial should be moved for the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice. At a hearing on the motion, Weinstein submitted an affidavit stating that Silver Bow County homeless shelters, the police department, and the post office had been searched for proof of Lockhead's residency, and none could be found. Lockhead also filed an affidavit stating that he resided in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed and that he had no intention of moving. The District Court concluded that Lockhead had failed to establish that he was a resident of Butte and granted Weinstein's motion for a change of venue. Although a District Court may consider affidavits related to a motion to change venue, the averments of a complaint will be taken as true in considering the motion. As movant, Weinstein bore the burden of proof in support of the motion, but failed to carry the burden of proving that Lockhead did not reside in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed or that Lockhead actually resided elsewhere. Thus, the District Court erred by shifting the burden of proving residency to Lockhead, and the change of venue motion was reversed. Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2001 MT 132, 305 M 438, 28 P3d 1081 (2001).

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under former Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-107, 40-4-211, and 40-7-108; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to this section. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Temporary Absences From Residence — No Change in Place of Residence: After Rosemary petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, her husband Timothy discovered that she had been away from her home in Billings for a 6-week period to attend classes at MSU. During that time, she had lived in Pray in Park County. Upon discovery of these facts, Timothy asked for reconsideration of an earlier motion to change venue to Park County. Citing School District No. 12 v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471 (1984), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion for a change of venue because temporary absences from one's residence do not change an individual's place of residence. In re Marriage of Bernethy, 260 M 402, 860 P2d 157, 50 St. Rep. 1144 (1993).

"Legal Residence" for Determining Eligibility for School District Transportation Contract: The meaning of "legal residence" for the purposes of 20-10-101(2) is to be determined in accordance with the rules set forth in 1-1-215. School District v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471, 41 St. Rep. 944 (1984).

Substantial Evidence of Residency: When respondents left their ranch within the county for the purpose of earning an income and educating their children, returned to the property each summer, intended to maintain the ranch as their residence, and paid county property taxes, there was substantial evidence from which the District Court could conclude that respondents were residents of the county and that therefore their children were "eligible transportees" within the meaning of 20-10-101. School District v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471, 41 St. Rep. 944 (1984).

Indigent Student's Right to County Medical Assistance — Residence Question: A college student born and raised in Cascade County was injured far from home. During recuperation at her parents' residence in Cascade County, she applied for medical assistance. She was denied. The Supreme Court of Montana found her to be a resident of Cascade County for purposes of county medical assistance, noting that she gives the county as her permanent address and intends to reside there after she finishes school and citing the rule that it is customary to look to the parents' residence in order to determine the residence of the student. Michels v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 187 M 173, 609 P2d 271 (1980).

Guides for Interpretation — Not a Definition: The rules set forth in this section are guides for interpretation of the meaning of "residence" which must be applied to each case in the light of the facts of that case; they are not a definition. McCarthy v. Mont. Power Co., 143 M 134, 387 P2d 438 (1963).

Wandering Child — Incapable of Establishing Residence: A wandering 13-year-old child from another state was incapable of establishing residence in Montana where she had no means of support and roamed from place to place for approximately 1 month. State ex rel. Lewis & Clark County v. St. Bd. of Pub. Welfare, 141 M 209, 376 P2d 1002 (1962).

Resident Freeholder: A freeholder becomes a resident under this section upon union of act and intent. If the intention to establish a permanent residence is ascertained, the recency of the establishment is immaterial. Kunesh v. Great Falls, 132 M 285, 317 P2d 297 (1957).

Occupant of Rest Home: Where the decedent had been a lifelong resident of one county but went to an adjoining county to a rest home because no similar care could be given him in his home county and while there he bought and paid for funeral services and a cemetery lot in his home county and voted in an election in his home county but died while at the rest home, it was obvious that he had no intention of changing his residence and his presence in the adjoining county was for a special purpose as intended by this section. In re Ingersol's Estate, 128 M 230, 272 P2d 1003 (1954).

"Residence" Synonymous With "Domicile": Where statutes refer only to residence and not to domicile, as does this section, the courts have generally held that the word "residence" will be construed to mean practically the same as "domicile". State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court, 107 M 97, 80 P2d 367 (1938).

Attorney General's Opinions

Residency of Special Education Student Following Termination of Parental Rights But Before Permanent Placement: For special education purposes, the school district of residence of a child for whom the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) has legal custody following termination of parental rights and before a permanent placement is accomplished is the same as that of the physical location of the District Court that ordered the termination. 43 A.G. Op. 36 (1989), overruling 40 A.G. Op. 69 (1984).

Residency of Special Education Student in Temporary Custody of Department: For special education purposes, the school district of residence of a child for whom the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) has temporary legal custody is the district of residence of the child's parents, regardless of whether the child is placed in a foster home in a separate school district. 43 A.G. Op. 36 (1989).

Residency of Special Education Student When Custodial Parent Imprisoned — District of Residence Responsible for Tuition: The school district of residence of a special education student whose custodial parent is imprisoned is the school district where the custodial parent resided prior to imprisonment. If a special education student is admitted to a school district that is not his district of residence, his district of residence is responsible for the student's tuition. 43 A.G. Op. 35 (1989).

Servicepersons — Registration to Vote — Tax Liability: The fact that a member of the military service has registered to vote in Montana is evidence, though not conclusive proof, that he is a Montana resident and is thus not exempt, under the federal Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, from property and income taxation by Montana. Montana's election law requires one to be a resident of Montana before voting in the state's elections, so a serviceperson who has registered to vote in Montana (thereby claiming to be a resident) may not claim tax exemption under the federal Act without offering convincing evidence that he is in fact not a Montana resident after all. However, to claim he is not in fact a resident after having registered to vote in Montana would subject him to prosecution for the misdemeanor of fraudulent registration. 41 A.G. Op. 2 (1985).

Residency Determination — Nursing Home Residents on General Relief: Under 53-3-306, which prior to its repeal in 1985 provided that general relief be paid by the county in which one resided, a county could not automatically disclaim financial responsibility for new applicants for general relief who moved to that county in order to receive medical care in a nursing home. The county of financial responsibility was the county where the applicant resided. Residence was determined by factors such as whether the placement in the nursing home was permanent or temporary, in which county the applicant was registered to vote, owned property, payed property taxes, or registered a vehicle, and in which county the applicant intended to remain. The original county remained financially responsible unless a court decree declared under 53-2-610 (now repealed) that the recipient's residence had changed. 40 A.G. Op. 8 (1983).

Special Education — Funding and Services: A school district may not establish a special education policy wholly independent of state funding. A special education program established by a district is not required to serve children in group homes within the district who are not legal residents but may do so cooperatively or by contract. 37 A.G. Op. 98 (1977).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 131 in (2)(a) near beginning substituted "holidays in subsection (1)(b) through (1)(l)" for "above-enumerated holidays (except Sunday)"; inserted (2)(b) concerning what constitutes a holiday if a legal holiday falls on a Saturday; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (1)(c) making Martin Luther King Jr. Day a state holiday; and deleted former (1)(l) designating Heritage Day as a state holiday.

1987 Amendment: In (1) deleted former (c) that read: "(c) Lincoln's Birthday, February 12"; combined Lincoln's and Washington's Birthdays on the third Monday in February; and inserted provision concerning Heritage Day. Amendment effective January 1, 1988.

Case Notes

Calculating Time for Service of Motion — Days Before Saturday Christmas and New Year's Day Not Holidays: Burlington Northern alleged that it had timely served its motion for a new trial, thereby tolling the 30-day period for appealing the jury verdict in favor of Dunkelberger. The railroad argued that Christmas and New Year's Day had fallen on Saturday and, since the courts were closed on the preceding Fridays, those Fridays were holidays and were not to be counted in determining whether the motion for new trial had been served within the required 10 days. The Supreme Court held that the fact that those Fridays were holidays for state workers did not make them statutory holidays and that those Fridays counted as part of the 10-day period. (See 2013 amendment.) Dunkelberger v. Burlington N. RR Co., 265 M 243, 876 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 499 (1994).

Attorney General's Opinions

Pay for Holidays — 10-Hour Days — Collective Bargaining for County Employees: A county may collectively bargain that public employees who work 10-hour days for 4 days per week are to be paid for 10 hours on holidays that fall on their regularly scheduled workday. 53 A.G. Op. 4 (2010).

Conduct of Criminal Trial — Never on Sunday: Montana law does not permit criminal trials to be conducted on Sundays except to conclude a trial already initiated as specified in 3-1-302. The exercise of power on Sunday by a magistrate with regard to proceedings of a criminal nature, as outlined in 3-1-302(1)(c), is limited to the issuance of arrest warrants. 43 A.G. Op. 27 (1989).

Heritage Day — Single Calendar Day Only: The governing body of a political subdivision must schedule the Heritage Day legal holiday on a single calendar day each year. 42 A.G. Op. 22 (1987).

Collective Bargaining Agreement — Days of Leave in Addition to Legal Holidays: The Board of County Commissioners may enter into an agreement with county employees that grants a day of paid leave in addition to the enumerated legal holidays. The collective bargaining provision in question merely provides an additional paid day off to attend the county fair for those employees covered by the contract. The provision does not make "fair day" a "legal holiday", nor does it suggest that an employee may accumulate "fair days" as vacation. The provision contravenes no statutory determination of employee benefits. The provision falls within the area that is a proper subject for collective bargaining. 38 A.G. Op. 116 (1980).

Holidays and Vacations: Section 2-18-603, which generally entitles each state, city, and county employee to a day off on the day preceding or following a holiday which falls on the employee's regular day off, is applicable to full-time salaried employees of a county hospital district. Vacation and holiday leave time for public employees are cumulative. If a holiday or its complement under 2-18-603 falls during a public employee's annual vacation, that day should not be counted against leave time. If counted against leave time, the employee must be given a paid day off at a later time to make up for the lost holiday. A public employee may be required to work on a holiday or its complement under 2-18-603. However, a public employee who works a holiday or its complement must be either compensated for the lost holiday or given an opportunity to take a paid day off at a later time. The holiday provisions of 2-18-603 apply to full-time, salaried public employees. They do not apply to part-time, temporary, or seasonal employees who are paid on an hourly or per diem basis for work actually performed. 38 A.G. Op. 16 (1979).

"School Holidays" and "Legal Holidays": School district employees, nonteaching and teaching alike, throughout the state of Montana, are entitled to days off on those holidays enumerated in 20-1-305, rather than the holidays of 1-1-216. School district employees are therefore entitled only to days off on New Year's Day, Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and state and national election days when the school building is a polling place and school functions will interfere with the election process. 37 A.G. Op. 150 (1978).

Nonteaching School Employees — Public Employees: Nonteaching school district employees are public employees and thus entitled to the legal holidays enumerated in 1-1-216 just as are all other public employees. They are not entitled to the school holidays enumerated in 20-1-305. 37 A.G. Op. 96 (1977), overruling in part 36 A.G. Op. 105 (1976).

Constitutional Convention Delegates — Election Day: Montana law (13-1-101) distinguishes between primary and general elections. The primary election for Constitutional Convention delegates is not a legal holiday because this section makes only state general election days holidays. The election for the delegates fits the 13-1-101 definition of general election, and that day is therefore a legal holiday under this section. 34 A.G. Op. 20 (1971).

Case Notes

Water Rights — Participation in Proceedings: A ranch operator purchased land and water rights with knowledge that the predecessor-in-interest was an objector in certain ongoing Water Court cases. Upon purchasing the property, the ranch operator signed an acknowledgment that the predecessor-in-interest and the claimant in the Water Court cases had entered a settlement agreement regarding the water rights. The ranch also participated in cases involving the water rights and the claimant in the Water Court cases, and when the predecessor-in-interest filed a notice with the court disclaiming any interest in the purchased water rights, the notice was received by the ranch's attorney. The Water Court determined that these instances all constituted actual notice of circumstances that should have put the ranch operator on notice of its responsibility to move for a substitution of parties under 85-2-403. The Supreme Court affirmed. Little Big Warm Ranch, LLC v. Doll, 2018 MT 300, 393 Mont. 435, 431 P.3d 342.

Receipt, Not Mailing, of Certified Letter Constituting Effective Notice: A lease provided that if the lessee defaulted and did not cure the default within 10 days after written notice from the lessor, then the lessor could retake possession of the property. The method for providing written notice was not described in the lease. When Anderson defaulted on rent, Grenfell sent a default notice by certified mail to Anderson's address as listed in the lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter, and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. Nevertheless, after 11 days, Grenfell retook possession of the leased property, changed the locks, and filed suit, alleging breach of the lease agreement, unlawful detainer, and violation of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court held in favor of Grenfell, and Anderson appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Anderson never received proper notice. Citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Notice § 35 (1989), the court applied the common-law rule that when a statute or rule merely states that written notice must be given without stating how it is to be given, it is not enough that the notice is mailed—it must also be received. The same rule applies to contracts in the absence of express provisions to the contrary. Thus, Grenfell's decision to enforce the 10-day default cure period was effective only upon actual receipt of a written notice by Anderson, whether hand-delivered, mailed, or otherwise. The District Court's conclusion that Anderson had actual notice, effective by certified mailing alone, was in error. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Unclaimed Notice Not Considered Constructive Notice: Grenfell sent a certified letter to Anderson regarding default on a lease, but Anderson never picked up the letter and it was returned to Grenfell as unclaimed. The District Court held that Anderson had constructive notice of the default. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although a party may not escape the effect of the giving of a written notice by refusing to receive it when it is presented in person as a notice, thereby profiting from a wrongful act, in the context of giving notice by certified mail, this rule requires an actual refusal to accept. In this case, there was no indication that the address to which the letter was sent was ever contemplated as a proper place of serving notice, yet Grenfell inexplicably served the default letter in a manner that Grenfell himself acknowledged would not be effective, even though Anderson had previously accepted all manner of lease-related business matters in person at Anderson's place of business. Although the District Court correctly found that Anderson did not claim the letter, the court incorrectly deduced that Anderson had refused the letter. Failure to claim the letter, of itself, was insufficient to impute Anderson's constructive notice absent evidence that receipt of the letter was refused. Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999), following Long v. Crum, 267 NW 2d 407 (Iowa 1978). See also Hill v. Zuckerman, 138 M 230, 355 P2d 521 (1960).

Notice of Contract That Is Unrecorded by Purchaser: A contract for deed between appellants and a life estate contracted for therein are effective and enforceable as against the parties and also against subsequent purchasers who have notice of the contract under 70-21-102. Notice to a subsequent purchaser can be constructive notice through a duly authorized, trained real estate agent who acts for the purchaser throughout the purchase transactions. A misapprehension on the part of the purchaser as to the contract provisions is not to be confused with lack of knowledge or notice. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

Unrecorded Instrument:

In action for reformation of deed, objection to introduction in evidence of contract which was not recorded prior to purchase of land by defendant on ground that no evidence had been introduced to show lack of good faith or notice on part of defendant was properly overruled when such evidence was offered later. Strack v. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane, 124 M 19, 218 P2d 1052 (1950).

In an action to foreclose a second mortgage on real property and to have it declared superior to a prior one, unrecorded at the time plaintiff placed his mortgage of record, plaintiff having been advised by language in his mortgage to the effect that it was "subject to a first mortgage heretofore made" on the property, he had actual notice of the prior lien. He was chargeable with notice of all material facts which an inquiry suggested by the recital would have disclosed, and with such notice he proceeded at his peril, even though the former instrument was not yet acknowledged or could be considered imperfect when he placed his mortgage on record. Angus v. Mariner, 85 M 365, 278 P 996 (1929).

Evidence was held insufficient to establish constructive notice in defendant city of an unrecorded grant of a portion of a water right made prior to its purchase of the entire right by defendant. Custer Consol. Mines Co. v. Helena, 52 M 35, 156 P 1090 (1916).

Excavation of City Street: Where plumber obtained license from city for the excavation and installation of a service pipe from street to residence, the city had notice of such excavation at time of granting such permission, and further notice to city of existence of such excavation was unnecessary to charge city with liability for damage resulting from unguarded excavation. Ledbetter v. Great Falls, 123 M 270, 213 P2d 246 (1949).

Knowledge by Agent of Facts Puts Principal on Inquiry:

Where prospective mortgagees were informed by their agent that prospective mortgagor owed numerous debts and that such mortgagor had acquired the branded cattle involved under contract, though the contract was unrecorded, mortgagees were required in exercise of ordinary prudence to make inquiry from some source other than mortgagor as to ownership of the cattle brand and of the cattle. Merrion v. Humphreys, 119 M 495, 176 P2d 665 (1947).

Where agent of insurance company issuing indemnity policy specifying plaintiff as sole tenant of a building in fact knew the premises to be occupied by more than one tenant, this was sufficient to impute notice to the company under this section that the premises were not wholly in the care and custody of a single tenant. Curtis v. Zurich Gen. Accident & Liab. Ins. Co., 108 M 275, 89 P2d 1038 (1939).

Rule of Chancery: This section embodies an old rule of chancery. Yale Oil Corp. v. Sedlacek, 99 M 411, 43 P2d 887 (1935); Trerise v. Bottego, 32 M 244, 79 P 1057 (1905).

Constructive Notice: Constructive notice, notice implied by law, is analogous to a summons and serves the same purpose. Oliveri v. Maroncelli, 94 M 476, 22 P2d 1054 (1933).

Failure to Make Inquiry — Foreclosure Sale: Defendant, in an action to quiet title, who relied upon an assignment of a certificate of sale and subsequent Sheriff's deed to real property sold on foreclosure, had sufficient notice of the facts and circumstances which subsequently resulted in a judgment setting aside the mortgage as fraudulent to put him upon inquiry before taking the assignment and to make applicable the rule that failure to make inquiry which, if pursued, would have led to actual knowledge, will deprive one of the character of a bona fide purchaser. Teisinger v. Hardy, 91 M 9, 5 P2d 219 (1931).

Ownership of Property: A bank, holding money as bailee or pledgeholder, which receives notice that one other than the bailor or pledgor is the true owner thereof but notwithstanding such notice delivers it to a person other than the claimant, may be held liable for the amount thereof. Maser v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Winnett, 90 M 33, 300 P 207 (1931).

Judgment Record: The record of a money judgment against Mrs. C. J. E. cannot be held to have imparted constructive notice to a purchaser of real property from Anna E., the record titleholder, that the property was impressed with a lien of the judgment, unless the purchaser had actual knowledge that Mrs. C. J. E. and Anna E. were the same person. Poulos v. Lyman Bros. Co., 63 M 561, 208 P 598 (1922).

WHEREAS, many people, especially teenagers, do not realize the consequences of driving while distracted and education is needed in order for teenagers to become more aware of the dangers they face while driving; and

WHEREAS, a national survey shows that two out of three teenagers use cell phone text messaging while driving, which has been found to increase the chances of a car accident by 50%; and

WHEREAS, other distractions while driving include talking on a cell phone, eating, dealing with personal hygiene, and adjusting music and, according to the federal government, more than 30% of all car crashes in the United States involve a distracted driver; and

WHEREAS, because 77% of fatal crashes involving 16-year-olds behind the wheel are caused by driver error, it is apparent that education could significantly lower the number of fatal car accidents; and

WHEREAS, car crashes are the leading cause of death for teenagers in the United States, about 10 teenagers between 16 and 19 years of age die in teen driver car accidents every day, and teens make up only 6.7% of all motorists even though they account for 14% of fatal car crashes in the United States; and

WHEREAS, officials say that teens' inexperience and recklessness on the road have a lot to do with the deadly statistics; and

WHEREAS, 18 states, not including Montana, have focused on the specific problem of teen driving and cell phone text messaging while driving and have made text messaging while driving illegal; and

WHEREAS, since 2007, approximately 21 states have recognized National Teen Driver Safety Week and planned specific activities targeting teen drivers; and

WHEREAS, establishing a state Teen Driver Safety Day is an important tool for raising awareness about the tragedy of teen driver car crashes, will spark communication among teenagers, their parents, and civic leaders about the causes of and solutions to teen driver car crashes, and will encourage self-reflection by teen drivers."

Effective Date: This section is effective October 1, 2017.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 291, L. 2017, provided: "WHEREAS, news of the end of slavery did not reach frontier areas of the United States, and in particular the southwestern states, for more than 2 years after President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation of January 1, 1863, and months after the conclusion of the Civil War; and

WHEREAS, on June 19, 1865, Union soldiers led by Major General Gordon Granger arrived in Galveston, Texas, with news that the Civil War had ended and that the enslaved were free; and

WHEREAS, African Americans who had been slaves in the Southwest celebrated June 19, commonly known as Juneteenth Independence Day, as the anniversary of their emancipation; and

WHEREAS, African Americans from the Southwest continue the tradition of Juneteenth Independence Day as inspiration and encouragement for future generations; and

WHEREAS, for more than 150 years, Juneteenth Independence Day celebrations have been held to honor African-American freedom while encouraging self-development and respect for all cultures; and

WHEREAS, although Juneteenth Independence Day is beginning to be recognized as a national and even global event, the history behind the celebration should not be forgotten; and

WHEREAS, the faith and strength of character demonstrated by former slaves remains an example for all people of the United States, regardless of background, religion, or race; and

WHEREAS, the character demonstrated by former slaves should inspire us in this country to give thanks for the freedom won by so many people in all nations cherishing liberty and to strive for the goals of bringing freedom and democracy to people of other countries no matter what their race or religion."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 118, L. 2019, provided: "WHEREAS, the abuse of prescription drugs presents a growing problem in our communities; and

WHEREAS, prescription drug abuse causes human suffering, illness, and death; and

WHEREAS, removing leftover and expired medications from homes and responsibly disposing of them makes communities and families safer; and

WHEREAS, October is National Substance Abuse Prevention Month."

Part 3
Rules Concerning Time

1-1-301. Definitions.

Case Notes

Statute of Limitations Calculated as Ending One Day Prior to Start Day in Next Calendar Year: Plaintiff was injured on December 24, 1999, and plaintiff filed a complaint on December 26, 2002, contending that because December 25, 2002, was a holiday, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 extended to December 26, 2002, so the complaint was timely filed. The District Court held that the complaint was time-barred and granted defendant summary judgment on the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, a statute of limitations begins to run when a claim or cause of action accrues. Plaintiff's cause of action accrued on December 24, 1999, the date of injury. Under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the day of the event is not included in computing any period of time, so the statute of limitations was counted from December 25, 1999. A year is defined as a calendar year, which is a 365-day period starting on a given day and ending on the date 1 day prior to the start day in the next calendar year. Thus, plaintiff's cause of action began on December 25, 1999, and ended on December 24, 2002, which was neither a weekend day nor a legal holiday. The statute of limitations was properly calculated, and summary judgment was proper because plaintiff's complaint was not timely filed. Bosch v. Town Pump, Inc., 2004 MT 330, 324 M 138, 102 P3d 32 (2004).

Faxed Return of Service of Summons Received on Evening of Final Day of Filing Considered Timely — Courts Always Open: White filed a complaint September 8, 1995, and summons was served on Klosterman September 8, 1998. The Sheriff's dispatcher faxed the return of service to the Clerk of Court at 8:23 p.m. the same day. The District Court held that the return of service was late because it was not filed with the Clerk of Court by 5 p.m. on the last day that filing was permitted. However, the Supreme Court found nothing in the plain language of the judicial rules of procedure or any Montana authority that provides those requirements. Rather, former Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that return of service be filed within 3 years; former Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), allows filing by facsimile or other electronic means; 25-3-501 gives faxed documents the same force and effect as an original; former Rule 77(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that District Courts always be open for filing; and this section provides that each day ends at midnight. The District Court's decision was reversed on grounds that filing was timely. White v. Klosterman, 1999 MT 316, 297 M 259, 990 P2d 1249, 56 St. Rep. 1265 (1999).

Publication on Sunday: Under this section, Sunday is a part of the week, and publication of a summons on four successive Sundays is publication "once a week for four successive weeks" as specified in section 93-3014, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Such publication is therefore valid, it not being forbidden by any general common-law, constitutional, or statutory prohibition. State ex rel. Fisher v. District Court, 110 M 61, 99 P2d 211 (1935).

1-1-305. Computation of time — when fractions of a day disregarded.

Case Notes

No Shortage in Postnotice Payment: The plaintiff filed an action in District Court to quiet title in real property on the basis that a tax deed was void because the defendant paid the back taxes 2 hours and 45 minutes short of the 2-week period provided in the assignment notice. The District Court concluded the 2-week notice requirement under the 2007 version of 15-17-212 (renumbered 15-17-125) was satisfied. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 3-day mailing rule in former Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), does not apply to the mailing of a notice of intent under 15-17-212(3) (renumbered 15-17-125(4)). In addition, the District Court properly disregarded the deficiency of 2 hours and 45 minutes in this case because, pursuant to 1-1-305, the law regards the day as an indivisible unit and discards fractional days in most time computations. Tacke v. Mont. Lakeshore Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 197, 361 Mont. 390, 260 P.3d 128.

Breathalyzer Tested Twelve Minutes After Mandated Seven-Day Period Between Tests — Breath Test Admissible: ARM 23.4.213 requires Breathalyzers to be tested and certified for accuracy every 7 days. The Breathalyzer used on the defendant on August 23 had been tested that day at 8:59 a.m. and on August 16 at 8:47 a.m., a time difference of 7 days and 12 minutes. This section provides that fractions of a day are disregarded in computations that include more than a day and involve no questions of priority. For most purposes, the law regards a day as an indivisible unit. Neither the administrative rule nor other law supported the defendant's argument that the test results were inadmissible because more than 7 days had passed between the two tests. St. v. Fitzgerald, 283 M 162, 940 P2d 108, 54 St. Rep. 545 (1997).

1-1-306. Computation of time — which days counted.

Case Notes

Statute of Limitations Calculated as Ending One Day Prior to Start Day in Next Calendar Year: Plaintiff was injured on December 24, 1999, and plaintiff filed a complaint on December 26, 2002, contending that because December 25, 2002, was a holiday, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 extended to December 26, 2002, so the complaint was timely filed. The District Court held that the complaint was time-barred and granted defendant summary judgment on the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, a statute of limitations begins to run when a claim or cause of action accrues. Plaintiff's cause of action accrued on December 24, 1999, the date of injury. Under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the day of the event is not included in computing any period of time, so the statute of limitations was counted from December 25, 1999. A year is defined as a calendar year, which is a 365-day period starting on a given day and ending on the date 1 day prior to the start day in the next calendar year. Thus, plaintiff's cause of action began on December 25, 1999, and ended on December 24, 2002, which was neither a weekend day nor a legal holiday. The statute of limitations was properly calculated, and summary judgment was proper because plaintiff's complaint was not timely filed. Bosch v. Town Pump, Inc., 2004 MT 330, 324 M 138, 102 P3d 32 (2004).

Cost Bill: Where verdict was filed on June 8, 1961, and memorandum of costs was postmarked June 13, 1961, service on June 13, 1961, the fifth day, met the time requirement of 25-10-502. Herdegen v. Oxarart, 141 M 464, 378 P2d 655 (1963).

Construction: In 1864, the First Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, by the enactment of section 430 of the Bannack Statutes at page 130, incorporated into the law of this jurisdiction the common-law rule and formula for computing time by excluding the first day and including the last, which at all times since has been and now is the written law of this jurisdiction. State ex rel. Burns v. Lacklen, 129 M 243, 284 P2d 998 (1955), overruling State ex rel. St. George v. Justice Court, 80 M 53, 257 P 1034 (1927), State ex rel. Bevan v. Mountjoy, 82 M 594, 268 P 558 (1928), Novack v. Pericich, 90 M 91, 300 P 240 (1931), and State ex rel. Sullivan v. District Court, 122 M 1, 196 P2d 452 (1948).

Application — Libel: The rule prescribed by this section is applicable to computations under the statute in all cases, whether the actions be ex contractu or ex delicto; it therefore applies to an action for libel. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912).

Day — Indivisible Unit: For most purposes, the law regards the day as an indivisible unit. It is only when it becomes necessary to inquire into the order of sequence of two or more events occurring on the same day, for the purpose of determining a question of priority of right, or when the computation includes only 1 day or less, that departure from this rule is permitted. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912); Harmon v. Comstock Horse & Cattle Co., 9 M 243, 23 P 470 (1890).

Double Holidays Both Excluded: Where the limitation of time in which an act may be done falls upon the first of two consecutive holidays, both days are excluded, and the words "any act provided by law" applies to acts which may be done within a specified time and not to acts which the law provides shall be done. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912).

1-1-307. Postponement of day appointed for an action when it falls on a holiday or Saturday.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: Near middle inserted "or a Saturday" after "holiday".

Case Notes

Payment of State Lease Authorized on Day After Holiday: Johansen's rental payment on a state agricultural lease was due on or before December 31. Johansen placed the payment in his rural mailbox on December 29, but for various reasons, the carrier left the payment in the mailbox on the 29th and 30th. There was no mail service on Sunday the 31st, and the post office was closed January 1 for the holiday. On January 2, Johansen took the letter to the post office for mailing, as evidenced by affidavit of the postmaster, but it did not receive a postmark until January 3. The Department canceled the lease for nonpayment. Although the letter did not receive a postmark until January 3, the Department had uncontroverted evidence that Johansen had timely mailed the rental payment. The Department's decision to cancel the lease was arbitrary and capricious, and the District Court's holding that the payment was timely made was affirmed. Johansen v. St., 1999 MT 187, 295 M 339, 983 P2d 962, 56 St. Rep. 731 (1999).

Construction of Section: Instead of embodying a prohibition, this section merely provides an extra day of grace. Any of the enumerated acts may be done lawfully on a holiday but are in time if not done until the next business day. State ex rel. Hay v. Alderson, 49 M 387, 142 P 210 (1914), distinguished in Miller v. Emerson, 120 M 380, 186 P2d 220 (1947).

2015 Amendment: Chapter 285 in (1) substituted "except as provided in 44-4-1502" for "notwithstanding any other state law". Amendment effective July 1, 2015.

Effective Date: Section 5, Ch. 308, L. 2011, provided: "If approved by the electorate, [this act] is effective January 1, 2013." Approved November 6, 2012.

Applicability: Section 6, Ch. 308, L. 2011, provided: "[This act] applies to the provision of a state service, as defined in [section 1] [1-1-411], applied for or intended to be made on or after January 1, 2013."

Case Notes

District Court Did Not Err in Determining That Field Preempted: The fact that Legislative Referendum 121 attempted to limit its own interpretation to the extent allowed by federal law was insufficient to save it from preemption because Congress has occupied the particular field. Mont. Immigrant Justice Alliance v. Bullock, 2016 MT 104, 383 Mont. 318, 371 P.3d 430.

Montana Folk Dance: Senate Joint Resolution No. 17, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, square dancing has been a popular tradition in America since colonial days and has attained a revered status as part of the folklore of this country; and

WHEREAS, square dancing is a joyful expression of the vibrant spirit of people of the United States, and the American people value the display of the etiquette among men and women, which is a major element of square dancing; and

WHEREAS, square dancing is a traditional form of family recreation that symbolizes a basic strength of this country, namely the unity of the family, which epitomizes democracy because it dissolves arbitrary social distinctions; and

WHEREAS, square dancing is the American folk dance that is called, cued, or prompted to the dancers; includes squares, rounds, contra, clogging, line, and heritage dances; and is a fitting symbol of our national character and pride.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MONTANA:

That the square dance is designated the Montana folk dance."

WHEREAS, the duck-billed dinosaur, when newly hatched, was less than 14 inches long and weighed about 1½ pounds but grew to over 30 feet in length and weighed about 3 tons; and

WHEREAS, dinosaur sites in Montana contain fossilized eggs, embryonic bone, babies, juveniles, and adults of several different types of dinosaurs; provide valuable evidence that duck-billed dinosaurs nested in extensive colonies and had nests 6 feet in diameter that contained as many as 20 eggs; and demonstrate for the first time parental care of dinosaur young; and

WHEREAS, the Montana discoveries have tremendous scientific value and will continue to receive widespread publicity in national and international journals, as well as in popular literature and television and radio programs; and

WHEREAS, naming a dinosaur as the state fossil will increase awareness that Montana is one of the best places in the world for the occurrence of important dinosaur discoveries and will have real economic value in terms of tourist promotion; and

WHEREAS, the name Maiasaura peeblesorum means "good mother lizard" (Maiasaura) and honors the Peebles family (peeblesorum), a Montana ranch family from the Choteau area where the discoveries were made."

CHAPTER 2
STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

Modification of Custody Order Required by Substantial Change in Circumstances — Application of In re Marriage of Johnson Required — Jurisdictional Prerequisites — Absurd Application of Statute Avoided: After making an agreement for child custody as part of the dissolution of her marriage, Kimberly determined to attend college and moved from Lewistown to Billings with her children. On a remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court held that In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689 (1994), did not apply because custody was not being transferred from the primary custodian to the secondary custodian. The Supreme Court held that contrary to the District Court's interpretation, Johnson did apply to the case and that Johnson applied to any case in which a custody modification would have the effect of substantially changing the children's primary residence, requiring that the District Court must first meet the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219. However, the Supreme Court found that a literal application of that statute would cause an absurd result by its application only to movement of a child to another state and not to instances in which the child is moved from one end of the state to another or to another country. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that if a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the child's custodian, causing the children to move from one location to another in a manner that would hinder the effectiveness of the custody arrangement, then the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219 have been met and the District Court may modify the custody arrangement pursuant to 40-4-212. The Supreme Court then applied the rule to the case before it and concluded that the modification of the custody arrangement changing the custody of Kimberly's ex-husband from 160 days to 75 days annually was in the best interests of the children, as demonstrated in the record. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997), followed in In re Marriage of Oehlke, 2002 MT 79, 309 M 254, 46 P3d 49 (2002).

Repeal by Implication Not Favored: The Supreme Court looks with disfavor upon repeal by implication. Without an express declaration by the Legislature that an enactment repeals an existing law, a later statute will not repeal an earlier law unless the two are plainly and irreconcilably repugnant to or in conflict with each other. W.R. Grace & Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 238 M 439, 779 P2d 470, 46 St. Rep. 1399 (1989), followed in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998). See also Ritchie v. Ennis, 2004 MT 43, 320 M 94, 86 P3d 11 (2004).

Mandatory Teacher Retirement Impliedly Repealed: Plaintiff was a tenured elementary school principal in Anaconda. In March 1977, she received notification that because she was 65 years of age her contract would not be renewed. This termination was accomplished by a majority vote of the board of trustees for the school district in accordance with 20-4-203(2) and board policy. Plaintiff sought a redetermination by the board and also appealed to the School District Superintendent. No action was taken. Plaintiff then filed a discrimination complaint with the Human Rights Commission. The Commission found 20-4-203(2) to be a statutory exception to the antidiscrimination provisions of Title 49, ch. 2 and 3. The District Court held that 20-4-203(2) was impliedly repealed by the adoption of 49-2-303(1) and 49-3-201. The Supreme Court affirmed, saying that while repeal by implication is not favored, the application of the rule that the latest enactment of the Legislature prevails best effectuates the intent of the Legislature in this instance. The Supreme Court said that the manner in which the Legislature enacted Title 49 clearly depicted the legislative intent that there be no discrimination in the lives of Montana citizens in certain areas, including employment. Section 20-4-203(2) permits discrimination based solely on age with no qualifications or justifications bringing it within the limited exceptions of Title 49. Because the mandatory retirement provision bore no relationship to job performance, it was held impliedly repealed. Dolan v. School District, 195 M 340, 636 P2d 825, 38 St. Rep. 1903 (1981), distinguished in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998).

Statutory Construction — Initiatives: The rules applicable to judicial interpretation of initiatives are the same as those applying to legislation enacted by the Legislature. St. Bar of Mont. v. Krivec, 193 M 477, 632 P2d 707, 38 St. Rep. 1322 (1981), followed in State ex rel. Palmer v. Hart, 201 M 526, 655 P2d 965, 39 St. Rep. 2277 (1982).

Questions of Statutory Construction — Court Determination: All questions of law, including the construction of statutes, are to be decided by the court and not by the jury. Therefore, it was not error for the court to refuse plaintiff's instruction regarding statutory construction. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Interpretation of Constitution: To determine the meaning of Art. II, sec. 20, Mont. Const., the Supreme Court employs the same rules of construction employed to construe statutes. The intent of the framers should be determined from the plain meaning of the words used. If that is possible, we apply no other means of interpretation. St. v. Cardwell, 187 M 370, 609 P2d 1230 (1980). See also, as to the intent of the framers, Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Part Case Notes

Severability Clause in Bill and Subsequent Amendments — Unconstitutional Provision Held Severable: The defendant physically assaulted his girlfriend, causing her numerous injuries. The defendant sought dismissal of his partner or family member assault charge, arguing that a former version of 45-5-206 violated his constitutional right to equal protection because the statute did not apply to persons in same-sex intimate relationships. The Supreme Court held that although the former version of 45-5-206 violated equal protection by defining the term "partners" in part as persons in a relationship of the opposite sex, the defendant's motion to dismiss was properly denied because the unconstitutional statutory provision could be severed and because, as a heterosexual male, the defendant received every constitutional protection he was due when prosecuted for physically assaulting his partner. Both the statute as originally enacted and a 1995 bill that partially amended the statute's unconstitutional definition of "partner" contained severability clauses, and severing the former unconstitutional clause would not affect the integrity or purpose of the statute to protect victims of domestic violence and provide for punishment of their abusers. St. v. Theeler, 2016 MT 318, 385 Mont. 471, 385 P.3d 551.

Preclusion of Wrongful Discharge Suit by Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Unconstitutional Impediment to Access to Courts: When plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge claim, defendant pointed out that the employment was covered by a union collective bargaining agreement (CBA) and that 39-2-912(2) precludes an employee covered by a CBA from seeking relief under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Plaintiff argued that if she was precluded from bring a wrongful discharge claim solely because her employment was covered by a CBA, then 39-2-912 unconstitutionally violated her access to courts, full redress, and a jury trial. However, constitutionality of a statute is presumed unless the person challenging it proves unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt. Here, plaintiff presented nothing to overcome the presumption of constitutionality. Plaintiff's argument concerning lack of legal redress also failed because a possible action against the union was still available. LaFournaise v. Mont. Developmental Center, 2003 MT 240, 317 M 283, 77 P3d 202 (2003).

Applicability of Act When Unconstitutional Part Eliminated: If, when an unconstitutional part of an act is eliminated, the remainder is complete in itself and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, the remainder of the act must be sustained. Tax Lien Serv. v. Hall, 277 M 126, 919 P2d 396, 53 St. Rep. 614 (1996).

Severability Clause in Bill — Provisions Held Severable: The Supreme Court held that the retirement adjustment payment provisions contained in Ch. 823, L. 1991, were void because they were in violation of 4 U.S.C 111. Citing Mont. Auto. Ass'n v. Greely, 193 M 378, 632 P2d 300 (1981), the Supreme Court held that the income tax portions of Ch. 823 were not affected by striking the adjustment provisions contained in sections 4 and 5 of that chapter. Those sections were segregable from the remainder of the act from an administrative and operational perspective. The inclusion of a severability clause raised a presumption that the Legislature would have enacted the law without the portion held invalid, and nothing else in the act contradicted that presumption. Sheehy v. Pub. Employees Retirement Div., 262 M 129, 864 P2d 762, 50 St. Rep. 1477 (1993).

Severability Clause in Bill — Entire Act Void: A legislative act is void in its entirety despite the presence of a severability clause when core provisions of the act are unconstitutional. White v. St., 233 M 81, 759 P2d 971, 45 St. Rep. 1310 (1988).

When One Must Look to Other Statutes to Determine Prohibited Conduct — Statute Establishing Jurisdiction and Penalty Not Deficient: District Court dismissed a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol, third offense, because defendant's first offense was a violation of 61-12-601 (now repealed and replaced by 61-5-217 and 61-8-723) when he was a minor and the court found he had only one prior conviction as an adult under 61-8-401. The court held that the current charge was DUI, second offense, and that it lacked jurisdiction to hear the charge. On appeal, the state argued that 61-12-601 (now repealed and replaced by 61-5-217 and 61-8-723) was unconstitutionally vague because it (1) did not establish a crime but merely provided a forum where other traffic crimes were to be prosecuted if a juvenile driver was involved; and (2) established penalties the court may impose. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal, holding that a statute is not deficient merely because one must look to other statutes to determine prohibited conduct, in this case whether the minor had unlawfully operated a motor vehicle. St. v. Gee, 222 M 498, 723 P2d 934, 43 St. Rep. 1452 (1986).

Administrative Interpretation of Statute: In determining the meaning of a statute, deference must be given to the interpretations given the statute by the officers and agencies charged with its administration. St. v. Midland Materials Co., 204 M 65, 662 P2d 1322, 40 St. Rep. 666 (1983).

Administrative Rule Void When Contrary to Longstanding Administrative Interpretation: The Department of Revenue's longstanding administrative interpretation of the meaning of "on the same street" as used in 16-3-306 has the force and effect of law due to the repeated reenactment of that section by the Legislature without change in the operative language that no license be issued to a business "on the same street" and within 600 feet of a church or school. Thus, the interpretation could not be changed, and an administrative rule making a change is invalid. Hovey v. Dept. of Revenue, 203 M 27, 659 P2d 280, 40 St. Rep. 272 (1983).

Penal Statutes — Grounds for Declaring Void: Statutes imposing penalties, either civil or criminal, must be clear and explicit, and if they are so vague and uncertain in their terms as to convey no meaning or if the means of carrying them out are not adequate or effective, the courts must declare them void. Missoula High School Legal Defense Ass'n v. Supt. of Pub. Instruction, 196 M 106, 637 P2d 1188, 38 St. Rep. 2164 (1981).

Penal Statutes — Education Funds: Section 20-1-301, providing that if a school district does not provide 180 days of instruction it is not entitled to state interest and income funds and the forfeited funds will be apportioned to the other districts in the county, is a penal statute and must thus be strictly construed. Missoula High School Legal Defense Ass'n v. Supt. of Pub. Instruction, 196 M 106, 637 P2d 1188, 38 St. Rep. 2164 (1981).

Legislative Intent — Implied Repeal of General Statutes by Later Comprehensive Act: While implied repeals are not favored where an irreconcilable conflict exists between earlier and later statutes, the courts do not hesitate to declare the earlier statute repealed, especially if the later act is a comprehensive act establishing elaborate inclusions and exclusions of persons, things, and relationships ordinarily associated with the subject. In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Case Notes

Blood Test Administered by EMT Supervised by Physician Assistant Under Instructions of Supervising Physician — Permissible Under DUI Statute: After the defendant was arrested and transported to jail, a search warrant was issued to draw blood and test for alcohol. An advanced emergency medical technician (EMT) drew blood and sent it to the state crime laboratory for testing. The defendant argued that because the EMT was under the supervision of only a physician assistant, rather than a physician or a registered nurse, the plain language of 68-8-405 was violated. The Supreme Court found that when 68-8-405 is read together with 37-20-403 and meaning is given to both statutes, a physician assistant who is under the supervision of a physician will meet the statutory requirements of 61-8-405, considering that the physician assistant acts as an agent of the supervising physician. St. v. Heath, 2018 MT 318, 394 Mont. 41, 432 P.3d 141.

Request for Modification of Property Settlement Agreement Properly Granted Despite Nonmodification Clause — Agreement Unconscionable Due to Extreme and Unanticipated Events: The parties divorced and entered a property settlement agreement, under which the husband retained the bulk of the marital assets and assumed responsibility for the marital debts and agreed to pay the wife a $10,000 monthly payment for life. The agreement contained a nonmodification clause and a provision that the prevailing party in any future dispute would be entitled to attorney fees. Subsequently, it became apparent that the stated value of the parties' combined assets had been vastly overstated. Additionally, much of the value of the assets was lost during the economic recession of 2008-2009. After some years, the husband fell behind on monthly payments and the wife filed a motion to hold the husband in contempt. The husband filed a countermotion to modify the agreement on the grounds that it had become unconscionable due to changed circumstances. The District Court ordered the husband to pay a lump sum to cover missed payments and also prospectively modified the property settlement agreement by terminating the $10,000 monthly payment. The Supreme Court found that the termination of the monthly payments was not an abuse of discretion despite the nonmodification provision. Although the Supreme Court noted that the statutory provisions addressing modification of maintenance payments in 40-4-208(2)(b)(i), modification of property disposition provisions in 40-4-208(3)(b), enforcement of separation agreements in 40-4-201(2), and nonmodification clauses in 40-4-201(6) appear to conflict when read separately, the Supreme Court relied on the fundamental rule in 1-2-101 that statutes should be interpreted as a whole, giving meaning to all, if possible. The Supreme Court found that when the statutes are read together it is apparent that the Legislature considered unconscionability as an appropriate reason to modify property settlement agreements in all cases. Beyond general principles of statutory interpretation, the court also noted that the inclusion of an attorney fee provision in the agreement anticipated potential future modification efforts by the parties. In re Marriage of Simpson, 2018 MT 281, 393 Mont. 340, 430 P.3d 999.

Tax Assessment to Someone Other Than Owner When Records Disclosed Owner — Tax Assessment Invalid — Subsequent Tax Lien Sale and Issuance of Tax Deed Void — Quiet Title Action Failed: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined that a defective property tax assessment voided a lien sale. It was undisputed that the defendant properly recorded its deed to a lot and that the Department of Revenue received the realty transfer certificate, which showed correctly the conveyance of the lot from the seller to the defendant. It was also undisputed that the Department continued to assess the lot to the seller, rather than to the defendant; that the defendant did not receive any notices of taxes due on the lot; and that the defendant paid all taxes due on the notices it did receive for other property that was purchased from the seller. The defendant argued that, under these facts, the Department's tax assessments on the lot were invalid and therefore rendered void the tax deed to the plaintiff. The District Court disagreed and held that, even though the wrong party was assessed, the tax assessment was valid under 15-8-201. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court through the statutory interpretation of 15-8-201. The Supreme Court reasoned that because the provisions requiring the owner to be named are mandatory, and 15-8-201 provides no cure for a defect in the identity of the owner, a tax assessment to a person or entity other than the owner, where the owner is known to the Department through properly recorded transfer records, is not a valid assessment. Because the tax assessment was void, the subsequent tax lien sale and issuance of a tax deed was also voided. The county lacked jurisdiction to hold the tax lien sale on the property because there was no valid assessment. The subsequent tax deed issued to the plaintiff was void, and its quiet title action failed. Zinvest, LLC v. Gunnersfield Enterprises, 2017 MT 284, 389 Mont. 334, 405 P.3d 1270. See also Moran v. Robbin, 261 Mont. 478, 863 P.2d 395 (1993).

Plain Language of Statute Applied — District Court Properly Refused to Review Objections to Standing Master's Report — Objections Broad and Generalized — Statute Required Specific Objection: The District Court did not err when it refused to review the respondent's objections to a standing master's report. The language of 3-5-126 plainly means that a party must file objections that designate or define a particular error the standing master is alleged to have made before a District Court may review the standing master's determinations. To conclude otherwise would deny adequate notice and due process to the parties. The respondent's objections were broad and generalized and did not define or explain a particular error that the standing master committed. The District Court correctly determined that the respondent failed to specifically object to the master's report as required by 3-5-126. Accordingly, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was not required to hold a hearing and correctly refused to review the respondent's objections to the standing master's report. In re Marriage of Taylor, 2016 MT 342, 386 Mont. 44, 386 P.3d 599. See also In re Marriage of McMichael, 2006 MT 237, 333 Mont. 517, 143 P.3d 439.

Definition of "Combined Appropriation" Invalid — Reinstatement of Former Administrative Rule Proper — Direction to Agency to Formulate New Rule Consistent With Statute Improper: The plaintiffs challenged the validity of an administrative rule defining the term "combined appropriation". The rule, which was issued by the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC), defined a combined appropriation as "two or more groundwater developments, that are physically manifold into the same system". The plaintiffs contended that the definition was inconsistent with 85-2-306. The District Court agreed and reinstated an earlier rule providing that a groundwater development need not have the same physical connection to be considered a combined appropriation and directed the DNRC to formulate a new administrative rule consistent with the District Court's order. On appeal by intervening well drillers, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the administrative rule was inconsistent with the plain language of 85-2-306 as well as the stated purpose of the Montana Water Use Act, but also remanded the case to have the District Court remove its mandate to the agency to formulate a new rule. Clark Fork Coalition v. Tubbs, 2016 MT 229, 384 Mont. 503, 380 P.3d 771.

Attached Smoking Shelters Subject to Montana Clean Indoor Air Act: Although the smoking structures attached to the casinos had two small vents near the top of the exterior walls, the structures constituted more than mere roofed shelters and were "places of work" within the meaning of the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act. The smoking structures had four walls, multiple large glass windows, inside entrances, roofs, carpeting, heating, air conditioning, electricity, and gaming machines. MC, Inc. v. Cascade City-County Bd. of Health, 2015 MT 52, 378 Mont. 267, 343 P.3d 1208.

Coal Contract Sales Price Includes Certain Additives — Plain Language of Statute and Legislative History Confirm Taxation of Coal Additives Prior to Shipment: Following audits of the plaintiff coal mine operator for 2005-2007, the Department of Revenue assessed additional coal severance taxes and penalties. In addition to a valuation issue, the assessment included recovery of taxes on two items that were added to coal before it was shipped on a train. The additives included a freeze-proofing agent and dust suppressants. The plaintiff responded by filing a declaratory relief action in District Court, alleging that the additives should not be part of the sales price, and that legislative enactments were being applied retroactively. The District Court held that the additives were subject to coal taxes based on both the plain language of the definition "contract sales price" in 15-35-102 and the legislative history. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, reasoning that the statute was broad enough to assess taxes based upon the costs associated with the preparation of coal for shipment, and that later legislative amendments provided further explanation of this practice. Cloud Peak Energy Resources, LLC v. St., 2015 MT 10, 378 Mont. 54, 340 P.3d 1258.

Hashish Not Marijuana — Definitions Harmonized: A medical marijuana card that was issued pursuant to the former Medical Marijuana Act as set forth in 50-46-101 through 50-46-210 (now repealed) did not entitle the defendant to possess hashish, which is specifically differentiated in 50-32-101. The Act was clear and unambiguous on its face, and the District Court's interpretation appropriately harmonized the statutes. St. v. Pirello, 2012 MT 155, 365 Mont. 399, 282 P.3d 662.

Failure to Consult With Subdivider Not Error When Plat Application Denied — Plain Meaning Rule: When the Gallatin County Board of County Commissioners denied an application for approval of a subdivision, it was not error for the Board to refuse to consult with the subdivider regarding mitigation. Under the language of 76-3-608, and in accordance with the plain meaning rule of interpreting statutes, consultation with the subdivider is required only when mitigation is required. MM&I, LLC v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2010 MT 274, 358 Mont. 420, 246 P.3d 1029.

District Court Not Required to Impose Mandatory Requirement When Statute Is Now Discretionary: The District Court did not err in failing to give credit for pretrial detention time against a fine when, before the defendant's arrest, the statute had been amended to read that the credit "may" be allowed as opposed to "must" be allowed. St. v. Hafner, 2010 MT 233, 358 Mont. 137, 243 P.3d 435.

No Exception to Sixty-Day Rule for Prosecutor's Filing of Notice to Seek Death Penalty — Lack of Prejudice to Defendants Irrelevant: The defendants petitioned the Supreme Court to take supervisory control and reverse the trial court's decision that the prosecutor's failure to file the notice to seek the death penalty within the 60 days required by rule was acceptable because the late filing did not prejudice the defendants. The defendants argued that the late filing was a violation of their rights to due process under the federal and state constitutions. The Supreme Court held that it did not have to resort to a due process analysis but that the issue could be decided on the basis of Art. VII, sec. 2(3), Mont. Const., granting the Supreme Court its rulemaking authority. The Supreme Court noted that it had amended Standard 1.1.a. in 2002 to include the 60-day notice rule and that the Legislature had not exercised its right to disapprove the rule in the two following legislative sessions. The state argued that the 60-day rule was subject to exceptions, stating that in the present case, the defendants and their counsel were well aware that the death penalty was a potential punishment and that the notice was filed sufficiently in advance of the trial to afford the defendants ample opportunity to defend against a capital case. The Supreme Court stated that the state's reliance on St. v. Sol, 282 M 69, 936 P2d 307 (1997), for the proposition that the defendants were entitled only to adequate notice was misplaced. The Supreme Court held that even if the defendants' rights to due process were met by adequate notice, that did not nullify their argument that the 60-day notice rule is a mandate. The defendants argued that the plain language of the 60-day rule was clear and left no room for the trial court to inject the concept of allowing a late notice if a defendant is not prejudiced by the delay. The Supreme Court agreed and held that the court rules were subject to the same rules of interpretation as statutory law and the notice rule was clear on its face that a prosecutor has only 60 days after arraignment to file the notice of intent to seek the death penalty. The Supreme Court pointed out that the rule states that the prosecutor "shall" not "should" or "may" file the notice within 60 days and that the use of shall creates a mandate for when the notice must be filed. Miller v. District Court., 2007 MT 149, 337 M 488, 162 P3d 121 (2007).

Harvest-Level Accounting of Timber Sales Not Required: Plaintiff challenged the methodology used by the state Board of Land Commissioners in approving the harvest and sale of timber in state forests, asserting that 77-1-202 required harvest-level accounting. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants, ruling that the statute did not require the Board to reconcile timber sale costs and benefits at the harvest level. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the statute, on its face, does not require accountings at all, but rather requires the Board to secure the largest measure of legitimate and reasonable advantage to the state. The court declined to insert what has been omitted from the statutory language, despite plaintiff's contention that a comprehensive economic evaluation was implicit in the statute. The court held that it could not be concluded that the Board has not secured or could not secure the largest measure of benefit from timber sales without harvest-level accounting, given the multiple purposes that the Board must fulfill with regard to school trust lands, the broad discretion and deference that the law provides to the Board in administering school trust lands, and current statutory accounting requirements. Thus, the Board is not legally required to conduct harvest-level review of timber sales and did not violate 77-1-202 when it decided to forego harvest-level financial reconciliation in a timber sale. Summary judgment was affirmed. Friends of the Wild Swan v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2005 MT 351, 330 M 186, 127 P3d 394 (2005). See also State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966), and Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999).

City Resolution Allowing Implied Consent to Annexation Upon Continued Use of Utility Services Affirmed: The city of Whitefish adopted a municipal resolution requiring that property owners consent to annexation in order to continue to receive city utility services and allowing the city to imply consent to annexation from property owners that continued to receive the services after they received notice requiring them to disconnect from the utilities. Property owners contended that the resolution was invalid, but the District Court held the resolution valid, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Attorney General held in 46 A.G. Op. 12 (1995), that a municipality may establish a rule requiring consent to annexation as a condition for continued receipt of services, and that opinion is in accord with 69-7-201. Further, the utility rule in this case put the burden on the property owner to arrange to disconnect from services if protesting annexation, so once proper notice was given, under 7-2-4710 and 28-2-503 the city's procedure to imply consent was a proper method to determine if a property owner wished to continue to receive city services or to protest annexation. Gregg v. Whitefish City Council, 2004 MT 262, 323 M 109, 99 P3d 151 (2004).

Charge of Assault With Weapon Limited to Intended Victim: After threatening to shoot his estranged wife's boyfriend during a telephone call, Smith was charged with one count of assault with a weapon for causing reasonable apprehension in the wife that the boyfriend would be shot and a second count for causing reasonable apprehension in the boyfriend that he would be shot. As part of a plea agreement, the second count was dismissed. Smith then moved to dismiss the first count on grounds that use of the word "another" in the statute meant that reasonable apprehension of serious bodily injury was apprehension experienced by the intended victim, not by a third-party victim who suffers apprehension of reasonable harm to the intended victim. The Supreme Court agreed. Thus, to convict Smith of assault with a weapon required that Smith caused reasonable apprehension of serious bodily injury in the boyfriend. Although that crime was properly charged in the second count, that count was dismissed. The first count was not a proper charge and should have been dismissed, and the District Court erred in not doing so. St. v. Smith, 2004 MT 191, 322 M 206, 95 P3d 137 (2004).

Order for Restitution Upon Imposition of Deferred or Suspended Sentence — 1999 Amendments to Sentencing Statute Clarified: Heath was convicted of theft and possession of burglary tools and sentenced to 10 years in prison with 2 years suspended upon conditions, including payment of restitution. Heath appealed on grounds that the 1999 amendments to 46-18-201 no longer allowed a sentencing court to impose restitution as a condition of a suspended or deferred sentence. Upon amendment in 1999, an internal reference in 46-18-201(5) was not changed to reflect the renumbering of the other subsections, which resulted in an ambiguity in the plain language of the 46-18-201, potentially rendered 46-18-237 and 46-18-251(2) meaningless, created uncertain directives for payment of restitution for all victims in 46-18-241(1) and 46-18-244(2), and created a potentially absurd application of 46-18-201(1). Because of the potentially absurd consequences of the 1999 amendment, the Supreme Court looked beyond the words of the statute and inquired whether the Legislature intended to make any change in the substance and effect of 46-18-201. The court concluded that the 1999 amendment was a simple codification error that resulted in a cross-reference problem that was completely inconsistent with legislative intent to authorize sentencing courts to impose restitution when necessary for rehabilitation or for the protection of the victim or society if there is an appropriate correlation to the offense committed. Heath's argument failed, and the imposition of restitution as a condition of Heath's suspended sentence was affirmed. (Note: The erroneous internal reference in 46-18-201(5) was deleted in 2003.) St. v. Heath, 2004 MT 126, 321 M 280, 90 P3d 426 (2004), followed in St. v. McDanold, 2004 MT 167, 322 M 31, 97 P3d 1076 (2004), and St. v. McIntire, 2004 MT 238, 322 M 496, 97 P3d 576 (2004).

Oil Well Not Considered Mine to Which Right-of-Way May Be Obtained Through Eminent Domain — No Condemnation Power of Private Individuals and Corporation Except Through Legislative Grant — Condemnation Statutes Strictly Construed: Plaintiff filed a federal action seeking to condemn an access easement and right-of-way across defendant's ranch land for access to drill and operate oil wells. The federal District Court certified two questions to the Montana Supreme Court regarding whether: (1) exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are considered a mine that constitutes a public use under 70-30-102; and (2) 82-2-201 grants the owner of a federal oil and gas lease the power, as the owner of a "mining claim", to condemn a right-of-way across land of another for access to explore and develop the lease. The Supreme Court answered both questions in the negative. Private individuals and corporations, like state agencies, have no inherent power of eminent domain, so their authority to condemn derives only from a legislative grant. Public uses for which the power of eminent domain are granted must be interpreted pursuant to the plain language set forth by the Legislature and may not be implied. Because eminent domain interferes with the fundamental constitutional right to the private ownership of real property, any statute that allows condemnation of private property must be strictly construed, giving the statute its plain interpretation but favoring the person's fundamental rights. Under the plain meaning of 70-30-102, oil wells are not considered mines to which rights-of-way for roads may be obtained through eminent domain proceedings. Further, exploration and development of a federal oil and gas lease are not a mine that constitutes a public use, so the owner of an oil and gas lease has no power under 82-2-201 to condemn a right-of-way. Dial-Up Internet Service Allowed Under Rural Electric and Telephone Cooperative Act: Plaintiffs, who were members of a rural telephone cooperative, provided dial-up Internet services. When the cooperative entered the market to provide similar competitive services, plaintiffs sued on grounds that the Rural Electric and Telephone Cooperative Act prohibited the cooperative from engaging in Internet services. The District Court held for the cooperative, plaintiffs appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the Legislature did not foresee the Internet when the Act was adopted, the plain language of the Act was to be construed liberally in allowing rural telephone cooperatives to provide adequate telephone service as technology advanced. Internet dial-up service, although not specifically enumerated in 35-18-105, is sufficiently similar to telephone service to be allowed under the Act. Weber v. Interbel Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2003 MT 320, 318 M 295, 80 P3d 88 (2003).

No Power of Guardian to Bring Dissolution Proceeding on Behalf of Incapacitated Person: When George's health began to fail, his daughter Judy was appointed temporary guardian. George subsequently filed for divorce from Agnes, but the District Court ultimately found that George lacked the capacity to bring a dissolution action. Judy requested and was granted permanent guardianship and conservatorship over George and filed an amended dissolution petition on George's behalf. The petition was granted, and Agnes appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under 72-5-321, a guardian of an incapacitated person has the same powers, rights, and duties respecting the ward that a parent has respecting an unemancipated child. The court also cited former Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), as authority for a guardian to litigate on the behalf of a ward. However, the specific provisions of 72-5-321 control over the general provisions of former Rule 17(c), so the only proceedings that the guardian of an incapacitated person may bring on behalf of the ward are those types of proceedings that a parent may bring on behalf of an unemancipated minor child, and this does not include the right to bring a dissolution proceeding. Therefore, because nothing in 72-5-321 grants a guardian of an incapacitated person the authority to bring a dissolution action on behalf of a ward, the District Court committed reversible error in holding otherwise. In re Marriage of Denowh, 2003 MT 244, 317 M 314, 78 P3d 63 (2003).

No Requirement That Private Property Be Available for Public Use Before Landowner Liability Shield Applies — Landowner Immune From Suit Absent Consideration or Evidence of Misconduct: Saari went inner tube sledding with a church group on a hill at a ski resort after the resort was closed for the day. The group paid no fees to use the hill and did not rent or purchase equipment from the resort operator. During that evening, Saari lost control and crashed in a creek bed, suffering injuries which subsequently caused Saari's death. Saari's estate sued the resort operator on six negligence counts, including survival action, wrongful death, negligence, premises liability, attractive nuisance, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that 70-16-302 precluded liability by the operator because there was no duty of care owed to Saari and granted summary judgment to the operator on all counts. The estate appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By its terms, 70-16-302 provides for landowner liability when a recreational user gives valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for using the property or when the landowner acts with willful or wanton misconduct. While conceding that Saari paid no consideration for use of the ski hill, the estate nevertheless argued that the operator generally benefited from after-hours sledders, which constituted consideration. However, no legal authority was advanced for the proposition that economic benefits received at a different point in time constituted valuable consideration given by Saari on the night in question, and these speculative statements did not give rise to a genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, the operator's failure to prevent or supervise after-hours sledding did not constitute willful or wanton misconduct. An absence of evidence cannot establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Finally, the estate cited Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), for the proposition that a question of fact existed regarding whether the property was open to the public. Under Simchuk, if the land upon which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the limited liability afforded by 70-16-302. However, a public use requirement would essentially negate the "without permission" language of the statute and exceed the parameters of the statute, and because the statute contains no express language that property be open for public use before the liability shield applies, the Supreme Court overruled Simchuk to that extent. Summary judgment on all counts was proper. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Display of License Plate in Windshield Rather Than on Bumper in Compliance With Law — Suppression of Evidence Proper Based on Illegal Investigatory Stop: A Deputy Sheriff observed a truck that appeared to have no front license plate pulling onto the highway, and the officer performed an investigatory stop based on a suspected violation of 61-3-301, which requires that license plates be conspicuously displayed and securely fastened on the front and rear of a vehicle. Lacasella's front license plate was secured with duct tape to the inside lower driver's side corner of the windshield, rather than fastened to the bumper. As a result of the stop, Lacasella was arrested for DUI and for driving with a suspended or revoked license. Lacasella pleaded guilty, but reserved the right to appeal the denial of his motion to suppress evidence based on the allegation that the arresting officer had no particularized suspicion to make the stop. The District Court held that the inside of the front windshield did not constitute the front of the vehicle and that the license plate was not unobstructed from plain view when displayed in the window because glare could prevent the license plate from being viewed at night. The court also concluded that even if the officer had seen the license plate in the window, the officer was still permitted to make an investigatory stop to ensure that the license plate was securely fastened to the vehicle. The Supreme Court considered the issue and reversed. Under the plain language of 61-3-301, Lacasella's license plate was clearly and conspicuously displayed and unobstructed from plain view. In believing that the license plate must be secured to the bumper, the officer misconstrued 61-3-301, and observations made by an officer who does not understand the law are not objectively grounded in law and cannot be the basis of a particularized suspicion. Thus, the officer did not have the objective data necessary to justify the investigatory stop, and the evidence obtained subsequent to the illegal stop should have been suppressed. Further, the District Court's conclusion that even if the officer had seen the license plate in the window, the officer was still permitted to make an investigatory stop to ensure that the license plate was securely fastened to the vehicle was also erroneous. Such a holding would justify an investigatory stop of every vehicle in Montana. Law enforcement is not permitted to make an investigatory stop unless an officer observes objective data that gives rise to an inference that an individual is engaged in wrongdoing, and that objective data did not exist in this case. St. v. Lacasella, 2002 MT 326, 313 M 185, 60 P3d 975 (2002).

Board of County Commissioners Compelled to Follow Clear Statutory Language and Allow Gravel Pit in Nonresidential Area: Plaintiff owned agricultural property adjacent to a school and sought to develop a gravel pit on the property. Plaintiff applied for the appropriate special review with the Board of County Commissioners. The Board determined that a gravel pit would interfere with surrounding property uses and would violate the rights of people who lived and attended school nearby to a clean and healthful environment, citing 82-4-431 and 82-4-432 as authority for the Board's right to deny the special review. Plaintiff argued that under 76-1-113 and 76-2-209, local planning boards may not prevent the operation of a gravel pit in a nonresidential area. The District Court concluded that plaintiff accurately construed the statutes and that the Board could not deny a gravel pit in a nonresidential area. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Board ruled as if either 76-2-209 did not exist or the statute unconstitutionally deprived residents of a clean and healthful environment, but as an Executive Branch agency, the Board violated the separation of powers doctrine by ruling on the constitutionality of the statute. The statutory language was clear and unambiguous, and the Board was compelled to follow the legal mandate and allow the gravel pit. Further, because the statutes were clear, the District Court was not required to reach the constitutional question and did not err in failing to address the constitutionality of the statute. Standard of Review for Statutes Applicable to Administrative Rules — Rules of Statutory Construction Inapplicable Absent Ambiguity in Statute or Rule — Deference Afforded Longstanding Agency Interpretation of Administrative Rule: The Supreme Court generally applies the same principles in construing administrative rules as it applies to statutes. If the plain meaning of a statute or rule can be determined from the language used, the court is not at liberty to add or detract from the language, and absent ambiguity in the language, the court may not consider legislative history or other means of statutory construction. When an agency's interpretation of an administrative rule or statute has stood unchallenged for a considerable length of time, it will be regarded as having great importance in arriving at the proper construction. However, even when a particular meaning has been ascribed to a statute by an agency through a long and continuous course of consistent interpretation, that interpretation will be afforded respectful consideration but is still not binding on the courts. Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002).

Requirement That Officer Provide Certain Information to Person Lawfully Stopped for Investigation or Stop and Frisk: Prior to a hearing on his petition for reinstatement of his driver's license, which was revoked after his refusal to take a Breathalyzer test, Krause moved to suppress various statements made to the arresting officer. Krause argued that under Montana's stop and frisk statute, before asking where Krause had been and whether he had been drinking, the officer was required pursuant to 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) to inform Krause that he was a peace officer, that the stop was not an arrest but rather a temporary detention for investigative purposes, and that, unless arrested, Krause would be released upon completion of the investigation. The motion to suppress was denied, and Krause appealed. The state argued that 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) applied only if the officer had reason to suspect that Krause was armed and dangerous, as provided by 46-5-402(1) (now repealed), asserting that this was an investigative stop governed by 46-5-401 rather than a stop and frisk governed by 46-5-402 (now repealed), and that because 46-5-401 does not contain the same information requirement as 46-5-402 (now repealed), it was not necessary that the officer inform Krause as required in 46-5-402(4) (now repealed). The Supreme Court agreed with Krause. By it terms, the stop and frisk statute clearly and unambiguously applies to the investigative stop statute as well. Therefore, a peace officer is also required to give the warning contemplated in 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) when a person is stopped for a DUI investigation, even when there is no intention to frisk, and the District Court erred when it did not suppress statements made by Krause prior to the officer giving the warning. (See 2003 amendment.) St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002).

Whistle Statute Applicable to Any Railroad Crossing, Not Just Public Railroad Crossing: Langemo was injured in a collision with a Montana Rail Link train at a private railroad crossing. Langemo contended that the railroad was liable for negligence per se under 69-14-562 (now repealed) because no whistle post was ever installed at the crossing, nor did the engineer sound the train whistle when approaching the crossing, in accordance with a longstanding railroad policy of not sounding the whistle at private crossings. The District Court applied the definition of road in 60-1-103, in which the word denotes a public way, and concluded that the whistle statute required bells and whistles to be sounded only at public crossings and granted summary judgment for the railroad. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. The District Court's interpretation violated basic rules of statutory construction and misinterpreted the applicable statutes. The whistle statute's use of the phrase "any highway, road, or railroad crossing", in its ordinary and usual meaning, meant every railroad crossing, not just public crossings. The whistle statute was not expressly repealed by the highway code, nor did the general highway code enacted in 1965 impliedly repeal the specific whistle statute of 1873. (However, note that 2001 amendments to 69-14-562 (now repealed) now explicitly require that railroad bells and whistles be sounded only at public crossings.) Langemo v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 273, 307 M 293, 38 P3d 782 (2001).

Right of Defendant to Plead Guilty Over State's Objection — Erroneous Refusal to Accept Guilty Plea: Peplow was charged with and convicted of DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, driving without insurance, failing to report an accident, and tampering with evidence. Prior to trial, Peplow tried to enter guilty pleas to the driving with a suspended or revoked license and driving without insurance counts, but the trial court ruled that it was not required to accept the pleas because Peplow's actions giving rise to the counts were part of the res gestae and probative of the issue of impairment; the trial court proceeded to trial on all counts. Peplow appealed on grounds that the trial court erred in refusing the guilty pleas. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court considered a defendant's right to plead guilty over the state's objection. The court noted the numerous statutory procedural safeguards in place to ensure that: (1) a guilty plea is made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently; (2) there is a factual basis for the plea; (3) the court is not bound by any plea agreements; and (4) a defendant may not withdraw a guilty plea if the plea agreement is not accepted. The Supreme Court cited Lamb v. Missoula Imports, 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965 (1988), for the proposition that when the word "may" is used to confer power upon an officer, court, or tribunal and the public or a third person has an interest in the exercise of power, then the exercise of power becomes imperative. Under 46-16-105, a plea of guilty "may" be accepted before or during trial. The Supreme Court construed this language to mandate the acceptance of a guilty plea as long as the statutory requirements are met. Further, under 46-12-204, a defendant may plead guilty or not guilty without limitation on the right to plead. St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001).

Requirement That Parole Board Member With Knowledge of Native American Affairs Participate in Proceedings Regarding Native Americans: George, a Native American, contended that he was entitled to have the member of the Board of Pardons and Parole with knowledge in Native American affairs participate in his parole review. The state contended otherwise, pursuant to a plain reading of 2-15-2302 (now repealed), and asserted that had the Legislature intended to require participation by the particular Board member with knowledge in Native American affairs, it could have stated so directly or at least have required that the member with that knowledge be appointed as a regular Board member. The Supreme Court agreed with George. Cognizant of the role of the judge to examine the substance of statutes without inserting what has been omitted or omitting what has been inserted, the court agreed with the state that at least at first blush, 2-15-2302 (now repealed) does not appear to require that the member of the Board of Pardons and Parole with knowledge in Native American affairs participate in parole applications by Native Americans. However, the court could think of no other plausible reason for requiring such a member on the Board, so the court ruled that the Board member with knowledge in Native American affairs is required to participate in parole applications by Native Americans and remanded George's case for de novo review with the full participation by that Board member. George v. Bd. of Pardons, 2001 MT 163, 306 M 115, 30 P3d 1065 (2001).

Erroneous Dismissal of Petition to Revoke Sentence Based on Failure to Hold Timely Hearing: Under 46-23-1012, there are two ways that an offender can come into custody for allegations of a probation violation. The first is when a judge issues a warrant for the offender's arrest, and the second is when the offender is arrested by a probation or parole officer or when a probation or parole officer authorizes a law enforcement officer to make the arrest. In this case, Goebel was arrested by a probation and parole officer. The second sentence of 46-23-1012(4) read: "After the arrest of the defendant pursuant to this subsection, a hearings officer for the probation and parole bureau shall hold a hearing within 36 hours of the defendant's arrest" (emphasis added). Goebel contended before the District Court that the petition to revoke his suspended sentence should be dismissed because the state did not hold a hearing within 36 hours of his arrest. The court agreed and dismissed the petition. On appeal, the state argued that the 1999 amendments to 46-23-1012(4) mandated a hearing only in the case of violators who are arrested pursuant to a warrant and that the Legislature left to the discretion of the Probation and Parole Bureau the decision of whether to hold a hearing for every other violator, while Goebel maintained that the phrase "pursuant to this subsection" required the Bureau to hold a hearing in every case of alleged parole violation before proceeding under 46-23-1013. The Supreme Court found the statutory language in subsection (4) to be clear and unambiguous and contrary to the assertions of both parties. Because a defendant may be arrested only under the provisions of subsections (1) and (2), the phrase "after the arrest of the defendant pursuant to this subsection" could not refer to the entirety of 46-23-1012, as Goebel contended, nor could it refer only to subsection (4), as the state contended. Rather, the court held that "this subsection" related back to the reference in the previous sentence to subsection (1), which allows a judge to issue a warrant or notice to appear, so a probable cause hearing by the Probation and Parole Bureau is mandatory only when an offender has been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Because Goebel was not arrested pursuant to a warrant, the 36-hour rule did not apply. Despite the fact that the Supreme Court found the statute clear and unambiguous, it pointed out that this interpretation rendered the statute illogical because probable cause must be shown before a warrant is issued. It makes little sense to require a second probable cause hearing, while common sense would dictate that there should be a reasonably prompt probable cause hearing when an arrest is made without a warrant. Rather than examine the legislative history to discern the Legislature's intent in using the particular language, the court ascribed the confusion to a legislative drafting error and left correction of the language to the Legislature. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 73, 305 M 53, 31 P3d 335 (2001), clarified in Gundrum v. Mahoney, 2001 MT 246, 307 M 96, 36 P3d 890 (2001), in which it was held that the 36-hour requirement for a probable cause hearing applies only to probation revocation proceedings under 46-23-1012 and not to parole revocation proceedings under 46-23-1023, and followed in St. v. Johnson, 2001 MT 277, 307 M 317, 37 P3d 701 (2001).

Accident Involving Multiple Liable Insureds — Maximum Insurance Coverage Limited to Policy Amount: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether persons insured under one policy, who are both found legally liable for causing one accident, must each be covered by the mandatory limits in 61-6-103. The District Court found that Montana's vehicle insurance omnibus statutes do not require separate, full coverage for multiple insureds when each insured is liable for independent acts of negligence arising from one accident. The court reasoned that 61-6-103 refers to each accident, not each separate act of negligence that may have contributed to causing the accident, and held that as a matter of law, once the injured person's damages resulting from the one accident exhaust the $50,000 policy limit, the insurer's obligation to cover any further claims ceases. The Supreme Court noted that if the Legislature ever intended to allow a double recovery system, it never expressly provided the language necessary for such an interpretation, but also noted that the language of 61-6-103 does not expressly prohibit double recovery. Rather, the clear statutory language provides that an owner's policy must provide a base amount of coverage, subject to limits exclusive of interest and costs, with respect to each motor vehicle, not each insured, in the event that the vehicle causes damage to persons or property, regardless of who is behind the wheel. The legislative history provided no evidence that the Legislature ever contemplated or wished to require that the minimum amounts of liability could or should be increased depending on the number of insureds found liable for causing one accident, and the Supreme Court, declining to construe the statute in any way that would insert a particular and precise meaning that had been omitted, affirmed the District Court's conclusion that the insurer was obligated under these circumstances to pay the policy limit on behalf of its insureds, and no more. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Statute Prohibiting Impersonation of Public Servant Not Unconstitutionally Vague: In connection with his activities with the Montana "Freemen", Clay Taylor held himself out to be a Garfield County Justice of the Peace, signing numerous documents with that title, and was charged with impersonating a public servant. His wife, Karen, aided Clay in the offense, and she was charged with impersonating a public servant by accountability. Both were convicted and appealed on grounds that 45-7-209 requires proof that an actual person was impersonated or that the section is unconstitutionally vague. Presuming pursuant to this section that the statute is constitutional, the Supreme Court disagreed, affirming the conviction. The statute clearly sets forth that anyone who pretends to hold a position in public service with the purpose to induce others to submit to the pretended official authority or act in reliance on that pretense is within the proscribed conduct. It is not necessary that a person falsely pretend to hold a specific position in public service. The statutory language is sufficient to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice of the conduct that is forbidden and is not unconstitutionally vague. The Taylors failed to meet the burden of proving vagueness or unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt, so any doubt was resolved in favor of the statute. St. v. Taylor, 2000 MT 202, 300 M 499, 5 P3d 1019, 57 St. Rep. 794 (2000).

Sufficient Evidence to Prove Accountability in Aiding Impersonation of a Public Servant: In connection with his activities with the Montana "Freemen", Clay Taylor held himself out to be a Garfield County Justice of the Peace, signing numerous documents with that title, and was charged with impersonating a public servant. His wife, Karen, aided Clay in the offense, also signing several documents as "Jurat in Law", including a document purporting to set forth Clay's appointment as Justice of the Peace, another purporting to remove the Garfield Board of County Commissioners, and another purporting to be a summons. She was charged with and convicted of impersonating a public servant by accountability. Karen contended on appeal that evidence was insufficient to prove her accountability. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing her signature on the documents and her presence during public Freemen activities as sufficient proof of her purpose to facilitate Clay's impersonation of a Justice of the Peace. St. v. Taylor, 2000 MT 202, 300 M 499, 5 P3d 1019, 57 St. Rep. 794 (2000).

No Due Process Right to Sentence Review — Actual Incarceration Required Before Sentence Subject to Review — Suspended Sentences Precluded From Review: Holt pleaded guilty to sexual assault, received a 10-year suspended sentence, and subsequently applied for sentence review. The Sentence Review Division denied the application on grounds that Holt did not qualify for sentence review because his sentence was suspended in its entirety and involved no actual incarceration. Holt appealed, alleging violation of his due process rights. After granting Holt's writ of supervisory control pursuant to Art. VII, sec. 2(2), Mont. Const., and former Rule 17(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court held that sentence review is not a constitutional right, but rather a system that the Legislature voluntarily created. Thus, the discretion to determine the circumstances and conditions under which sentence review will be allowed lies with the Legislature, and the state's discretion is not subject to due process concerns unless it offends some principle of justice so deeply rooted in the traditions and conscience of the people as to be ranked fundamental (see Mont. v. Egelhoff, 518 US 37, 135 L Ed 2d 361, 116 S Ct 2013 (1996)). The Sentence Review Division's interpretation of 46-18-903(1), excluding a person who is not incarcerated from sentence review, comports with the rules of statutory construction, is consistent with the sentence review statutes as a whole, reflects the intent of the Legislature, avoids absurd or unduly harsh results, and is entitled to deference because the Division is charged with administration of the sentence review statutes. Because sentence review is a statutory right of relatively recent origin, the due process clauses of the U.S. and Montana Constitutions do not demand that sentence review be available at all, nor do they limit the Legislature's restriction of sentence review to defendants who are actually incarcerated. State ex rel. Holt v. District Court, 2000 MT 142, 300 M 35, 3 P3d 608, 57 St. Rep. 560 (2000).

Claim for Common-Law Tort of Bad Faith by Third Party Not Preempted by Statute — General Statute of Limitations Applicable: The District Court dismissed Brewington's complaint against two insurance companies based on the conclusion that the complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because the claim was barred by the statute of limitations in 33-18-242 regarding third-party claimants. Brewington contended that the claim was based on the common-law tort of bad faith, not on 33-18-242. The Supreme Court construed the plain language of the statute in determining that by its terms, 33-18-242 does not prohibit a third-party claimant from bringing an action for bad faith. Both Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), and Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), establish a common-law cause of action for bad faith that was not affected by the passage of 33-18-242. When the common law is not in conflict with a statute, the common law applies. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that 33-18-242 prohibited Brewington from pleading the common-law tort of bad faith was reversible error. Further, because the claim was brought for bad faith and not pursuant to 33-18-242, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204, not the 1-year statute of limitations in 33-18-242, applied. Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237, 56 St. Rep. 1257 (1999), distinguishing Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered, alleging contributory negligence and requesting attorney fees pursuant to 25-10-303. The Valeos moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of fees, and the District Court denied the motion. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court awarded Tabish attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that there is no reciprocal right to attorney fees under 25-10-303 because that statute grants only a plaintiff the right to attorney fees. Granting fees to a defendant pursuant to 25-10-303 would require the Supreme Court to insert language into that statute that isn't there, an act prohibited by this section. The Supreme Court dismissed Tabish's argument that fees are authorized by 25-10-101 and 25-10-102, pointing out that those statutes authorize the payment of only costs, not attorney fees. The Supreme Court also analyzed numerous cases cited by Tabish as authority for his claim that the payment of fees is reciprocal, holding that in each previous Supreme Court opinion cited by Tabish, the Supreme Court relied upon a different statute other than 25-10-303. For that reason, those cases were inapplicable to the issue before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the District Court and denied the defendant payment of his attorney fees. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Authority of District Court to Order New Criminal Trial Sua Sponte: Absent a lawful enactment by the Legislature withholding a trial court's inherent power to grant a new trial sua sponte, the court's authority to do so stands. Addressing the ambiguity in the statutory language while giving effect to all provisions of 46-16-702, the Supreme Court held that the right of a defendant to move for a new trial does not affect the court's inherent power to order a new trial sua sponte when required in the interests of justice. Given the circumstances of the court's concern for the state's "selective prosecution", the violation of the court's pretrial order precluding the giving of instructions on lesser included offenses unless presented prior to trial, the overwhelmingly contradictory witness testimony, and the court's fear that the jury was deprived of an option more supportable by the facts, the interests of justice demanded a new trial and the District Court did not err in ordering one sua sponte. St. v. Brummer, 1998 MT 11, 287 M 168, 953 P2d 250, 55 St. Rep. 30 (1998). See also St. v. Baker, 2013 MT 113, 370 Mont. 43, 300 P.3d 696, in which the Supreme Court clarified that Brummer does not excuse a defendant from filing a motion for a new trial within the timeframe required under 46-16-702, and St. v. Morse, 2015 MT 51, 378 Mont. 249, 343 P.3d 1196, in which the Supreme Court determined that an untimely motion for a new trial did not prohibit the District Court from providing a remedy when the facts warranting a new trial came from posttrial statements made by the victim after the expiration of the 30-day time limit.

Mining Held to Be Precondition for Permit Renewal — Two-Year Extension Provision Applicable to Three-Year Term for Mining — Construction and Purpose of Statute: In 1984, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) issued Montco a 5-year mining permit. Montco performed no site preparation or other work during the first 3 years after the permit was issued, but Montco applied for and was granted a 2-year extension of the mining deadline. During the first 4 years of the permit, the permit was under challenge in administrative and judicial proceedings. As the 5-year term came to an end, Montco applied for a 5-year renewal, and renewal was granted by the Department. When 3 years of that 5-year period came to an end with Montco having accomplished no work at the site, Montco applied for and was granted another 2-year extension, although throughout this second 5-year period, there were no formal administrative or judicial proceedings challenging the permit. After Montco asked for another 5-year extension of the permit, it was denied by the Department, but the District Court granted summary judgment for Montco and against intervenors, requiring that another 5-year extension be granted. The Supreme Court followed the rules of statutory construction preventing part of a statute from having no effect, prohibiting a court from inserting omitted language, and prohibiting absurd results and held that: (1) the period for a 2-year renewal applies only to the first 3-year period for commencement of mining; (2) the 3-year period for commencement of mining must be renewed for 2 years if the permittee proves that mining was not commenced because the permit was being litigated; (3) renewal of the 5-year permit term may be accomplished only by an "operator", who is defined in 82-4-203 as a person "engaged in mining"; and (4) once a permit has expired after the initial 3-year period (if no extension of the time for commencement of mining is granted) or after the 2-year extension for the permittee to commence mining, the permit may not again be renewed because, in the words of 82-4-221(1), the permittee is no longer in compliance with the requirements of "this part" and the permit has therefore expired. The Supreme Court also held that an administrative rule adopted by the Department could not be construed to require a result contrary to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the statutes and that the District Court's interpretation, automatically granting a 3-year extension of the permit itself, not only made the "must expire" language of the statute meaningless but was also contrary to the purpose of the Montana Strip and Underground Mine Reclamation Act, which seeks an orderly development of coal resources while protecting a wide range of other interests and values. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ordered that summary judgment be granted against Montco and denied renewal of the permit. Montco v. Simonich, 285 M 280, 947 P2d 1047, 54 St. Rep. 1150 (1997).

Applicability of Act When Unconstitutional Part Eliminated: If, when an unconstitutional part of an act is eliminated, the remainder is complete in itself and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, the remainder of the act must be sustained. Tax Lien Serv. v. Hall, 277 M 126, 919 P2d 396, 53 St. Rep. 614 (1996).

Privacy Interest of Witness Held Sufficient for Closure of City Council Meeting — "Generally Known" Incident: Goyen, the Chief of Police of Troy, was not notified of a meeting of the Troy City Council on May 10 at which an incident involving Goyen and a city gravel pile ("gravel-gate") was discussed. That meeting was closed at the request of the Mayor of Troy and at the request of a witness, Denton, who testified regarding indiscretions with Goyen in a patrol car. Later, after Goyen was discharged, he brought an action arguing that Denton's privacy interest was not at issue and that, in any event, the facts of her indiscretions with him were well known in the community, so much so that the demands of Denton's privacy could not outweigh the merits of public disclosure. The Supreme Court held that the plain meaning of 2-3-203 clearly allows a witness to assert the witness's privacy interest. Citing Missoulian v. Bd. of Regents of Higher Educ., 207 M 513, 675 P2d 962 (1984), the Supreme Court held that even harmless or generally known information is subject to constitutional protection and that Denton's relationship with Goyen, while known by others, was private in nature and Denton therefore had a reasonable expectation of privacy that society would recognize. Goyen v. Troy, 276 M 213, 915 P2d 824, 53 St. Rep. 353 (1996).

Tort Claim Against Political Subdivision — No Requirement for Filing of Administrative Claim — Statute Clear and Unambiguous: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. The Supreme Court held that there is no requirement under 2-9-301(3) similar to the requirement under 2-9-301(1) that a tort claim against a political subdivision first be presented for administrative settlement. To the extent that such a requirement was implied in Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 690 (1991), the Supreme Court expressly overruled that case. The Supreme Court also held that 2-9-301(3) is clear and unambiguous in its lack of requirement of an administrative claim and that Stratemeyer therefore filed his tort action within the 3-year statute of limitations contained in 27-2-204. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep. 245 (1996).

Social Security Benefits Offset Indexed to Date of Eligibility — Statute Not Ambiguous — Rule of Liberal Construction Inapplicable: Broeker was injured in the course of his employment when a soft drink machine fell on him. In determining Social Security benefits to be offset against Broeker's workers' compensation benefits, the Workers' Compensation Court held that the state payments were to be indexed to the date on which Broeker became eligible for those payments. The Supreme Court held that Broeker was incorrect when he argued that the words "for such week" in statute were ambiguous. The Supreme Court held that the language clearly referred to the week in which benefits are paid and that a rule of liberal construction in effect at the time of Broeker's injury was inapplicable because statute was unambiguous. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that indexing the offset to the date on which Broeker became eligible for benefits was correct. Broeker v. Great Falls Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 275 M 502, 914 P2d 967, 53 St. Rep. 235 (1996).

Failure to Accept or Deny Claim Within Thirty Days Is Acceptance as Matter of Law — Solheim Reversed — Options for Insurer: After Haag injured his shoulder while working for a school district, he filed a timely claim with the district's workers' compensation insurer. More than 2 months later, the claims adjuster for the district's insurer denied the claim. The Workers' Compensation Court, relying upon Solheim v. Ranch, 208 M 265, 677 P2d 1034 (1984), held that the insurer's failure to respond within the 30-day time period provided in 39-71-606(1) was not an automatic acceptance of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Solheim. The Supreme Court held that in deciding Solheim, it had exceeded its proper role as a court, that 39-71-608 provides an insurer with an alternative to admitting liability, and that 39-71-609 and 39-71-610 provide an insurer with a means to subsequently deny liability after accepting liability under 39-71-606 or beginning payments with a reservation of rights under 39-71-608. The Supreme Court also noted that in this case, the insurer could not later contest the claim on the basis of fraud because the issue of fraud was not properly before the Workers' Compensation Court. Haag v. Mont. Schools Group Ins. Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P2d 693, 52 St. Rep. 1146 (1995).

Certificate of Survey Filed Before Monuments Set Not Properly Filed Within Meaning of Subdivision Act: Stanchfield Cattle Company sought to subdivide land by dividing it into 20-acre parcels and having it surveyed. After completion of the survey, the surveyor had the certificate of survey filed, with a note on the face of the certificate stating that the monuments had not been set because of winter conditions but would be set before July 1. NFC, which held a right of first refusal on the property, sued to prevent the transfer of any property to prospective buyers, claiming that the certificate of survey had not been filed in accordance with the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court decision, holding that despite whatever practices might be common among surveyors, 76-3-404(3) and an administrative rule of the Department of Commerce (now Department of Labor and Industry), ARM 8.94.3002, require that the monuments be set at the time that the certificate of survey is filed. The Supreme Court noted that it could not change the requirements of the Act and the Department rule. NFC Partners v. Stanchfield Cattle Co., 274 M 46, 905 P2d 1106, 52 St. Rep. 1115 (1995).

Cap on Benefits Payments as Temporary — Statutory Rate at Time of Injury Following Termination of Cap: The 1987 Legislature placed an arbitrary cap on the benefits payable to injured workers, as an exception to the regular benefit rate provided in 39-71-701(3)(1987). The Supreme Court construed the cap according to standard rules of statutory construction and held that according to the plain meaning of the words used, 39-71-701 was clear and unambiguous in establishing a temporary rather than permanent cap on benefit payments. Following expiration of the benefit cap on June 30, 1991, the maximum benefit rate for workers is set at the state's average weekly wage at the time of the injury. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 267 M 516, 885 P2d 428, 51 St. Rep. 1145 (1994).

Postconviction Relief From City Court Allowed — Plain Meaning Rule Followed: Christensen was convicted in Plentywood City Court of several traffic violations and, following conviction, filed a petition for postconviction relief in District Court. The District Court dismissed the petition based upon its conclusion that postconviction relief could be had only from judgments of a court of record. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that 46-21-101(2) clearly provides for postconviction relief from judgments of a City Court and that the statute is clear and unambiguous and should be followed. St. v. Christensen, 265 M 374, 877 P2d 468, 51 St. Rep. 542 (1994).

Workers' Compensation Court Error in Amending Termination of Benefits Statute That Legislature Had Not Amended: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Legislature's failure to amend 39-71-710 to disallow retired claimants from receiving partial disability benefits, in light of the subsequent amendment of 39-71-703, was an obvious oversight. The court concluded, without any reference to legislative history, that it was not the Legislature's intent to allow such benefits. However, by its decision, the court amended the termination of benefits statute that the Legislature either failed or declined to amend and, in the process, erred by inserting into the statute what had been omitted. The Supreme Court strictly construed the statutory language, concluding that 39-71-710 (1987) did not provide for termination of benefits that were awarded pursuant to 39-71-703 (1991) when claimant retired. The case was remanded for a determination of the duration over which claimant was entitled to permanent partial disability benefits. Russette v. Chippewa Cree Housing Authority, 265 M 90, 874 P2d 1217, 51 St. Rep. 414 (1994).

Ski Area's Duties Not Limited to Statutory Duties: In response to an injured skier's allegations of negligence, the ski area asserted that its duties were limited to those set forth in 23-2-733 and that because the skier did not allege any breach of the statutory duties, the ski area was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Applying a court's role in statutory construction to simply ascertain and declare what is contained in the section's terms and substance without inserting what has been omitted, the Supreme Court found that in neither the original enactment of 23-2-733 nor in subsequent amendments did the Legislature provide that a ski area's only duties were those enumerated in that section and that there was no other duty of due care owed by operators to skiers. The duty of due care is imposed by 27-1-701. In holding that the operator's duties were not limited to those listed in 23-2-733, the court interpreted the statute in a way that would give it effect rather than in a way that would render it unconstitutional. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Construction of Conflicting Constitutional Provisions: To determine the meaning of a constitutional provision, the Supreme Court will apply the same rules of construction employed to construe statutes. As with the construction of statutes, when there are several constitutional provisions that would otherwise be inconsistent, a construction should be adopted, if possible, that will give effect to all of them. A possible conflict between statutory law and constitutional provisions should be reconciled, if possible. State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court, 262 M 70, 863 P2d 1027, 50 St. Rep. 1447 (1993).

Intention Shown by Plain Meaning — Other Means of Interpretation Barred:

The rules of statutory construction require the language of a statute to be construed according to its plain meaning. If the language is clear and unambiguous, no further interpretation is required. The Supreme Court will resort to legislative history only if legislative intent cannot be determined from the plain wording of the statute. Lovell v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 260 M 279, 860 P2d 95, 50 St. Rep. 1043 (1993). See also St. v. Zabawa, 279 M 307, 928 P2d 151, 53 St. Rep. 1162 (1996).

Where the intention of the Legislature can be determined from the plain meaning of words used in a statute, the courts may not go further and apply any other means of interpretation. Tongue River Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 195 M 511, 636 P2d 862, 38 St. Rep. 2032 (1981).

No Coverage by Montana Labor Law for Employees Covered by Federal Fair Labor Standards Act: The claimants argued that they were covered by the provisions of Title 39, ch. 3, part 4, because the federal Fair Labor Standards Act contains a clause stating that nothing in its provisions excuses compliance with state laws creating higher standards. The Supreme Court ruled that the claimants were not covered by Montana law because the language of Title 39, ch. 3, part 4, as it read in 1985, clearly showed that the state Legislature intended to exclude workers covered by the federal Act from coverage under state law. Stewart v. Region II Child & Family Serv., 242 M 88, 788 P2d 913, 47 St. Rep. 572 (1990).

Prima Facie Constitutionality of Legislative Enactments — Limit on Court Contravention of Legislative Power: The constitutionality of a legislative enactment is prima facie presumed, and every intendment in its favor will be presumed unless its unconstitutionality appears beyond reasonable doubt. When the Legislature acts within its constitutional power, courts are unable to contravene such power on any court-presumed grounds of fairness, absent equal protection consequences. Fallon County v. St., 231 M 443, 753 P2d 338, 45 St. Rep. 748 (1988), followed in Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506, 50 St. Rep. 731 (1993). See also St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998).

Reasonable Construction of Whole Statute Without Inserting or Omitting Anything: In construing a statute, the court must find legislative intent from the plain meaning by reasonably and logically interpreting the statute as a whole without omitting or inserting anything or determining intent from a reading of only a part of the statute. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986). See also Wild v. Fregein Constr., 2003 MT 115, 315 M 425, 68 P3d 855 (2003).

Review of Bill's Title — First Step in Construction: If a statute requires construction, a review of the title of the original bill is a necessary first step to aid that construction. In this case, a bill's title showed that the parents, guardian, or other responsible person was liable for a minor driver's negligence unless he signed the minor's application for a driver's license and provided proof of financial responsibility. The court would not look at a particular part of the whole statute and read it, as did appellant, to provide that there was no liability if a parent or guardian signed and provided proof, but that there was liability if both parents or some other responsible person signed and provided proof. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

Ambiguous Provision — Harmonizing, Legislative History, and Administrative Interpretation: Legislative intent may be determined in a number of ways when a statute is ambiguous. The court presumes the Legislature would not pass a meaningless statute, and the court must harmonize statutes relating to the same subject so as to give each effect. The court can look to the legislative history of the statute. Great deference and respect must be given to interpretation of the statute by persons and agencies charged with its administration. Mont. Contractors' Ass'n, Inc. v. Dept. of Highways, 220 M 392, 715 P2d 1056, 43 St. Rep. 470 (1986), followed in Albright v. St., 281 M 196, 933 P2d 815, 54 St. Rep. 132 (1997). Albright was followed in Winchell v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 1999 MT 11, 293 M 89, 972 P2d 1132, 56 St. Rep. 48 (1999).

Construction When More Than One Statute Applicable to Situation: When several statutes apply to a situation, the statutes should be construed, if possible, in a manner that will give effect to each of them. Schuman v. Bestrom, 214 M 410, 693 P2d 536, 42 St. Rep. 54 (1985).

Court Not to Supply Omissions: In construing a statute, courts cannot insert what has been omitted. State ex rel. Palmer v. Hart, 201 M 526, 655 P2d 965, 39 St. Rep. 2277 (1982); Skrukrud v. Gallatin Laundry Co., Inc., 171 M 217, 557 P2d 278 (1976).

Plain, Unambiguous, Direct Language: The Supreme Court's function in construing legislation is to ascertain and state what, in terms or substance, is contained within the legislation; and if the language is plain, unambiguous, direct, and certain, the statute speaks for itself. It is the court's duty to construe the law as it finds it. State ex rel. Palmer v. Hart, 201 M 526, 655 P2d 965, 39 St. Rep. 2277 (1982). See also Estate of Langendorf, 262 M 123, 863 P2d 434, 50 St. Rep. 1474 (1993).

Presumption Legislature Knew What It Was Doing: In construing a statute, the court must presume that the legislative body knew what it was doing. State ex rel. Palmer v. Hart, 201 M 526, 655 P2d 965, 39 St. Rep. 2277 (1982).

Procedural, Not Substantive Provisions of Wage Payment Law Applicable to Minimum Wage Claims: Plaintiffs filed claims against their former employer, school district, for violation of Minimum Wage and Overtime Compensation Act (MWOCA). The District Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to payment of back wages from the school district but denied plaintiffs' claim for statutory penalty and attorney fees, ruling that the school district was not an "employer" within the meaning of the Montana Wage Payment Act (WPA). The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ruled that the plain meaning of the statute indicated that it was the Legislature's intent to incorporate the remedial portions of the WPA only and that the substantive provisions of the MWOCA, including its definition of "employer", applied in this case. Sink v. School District, 199 M 352, 649 P2d 1263, 39 St. Rep. 1448 (1982).

Rules of Construction to Apply: It is not the function of the Supreme Court to insert into a statute what has been omitted, and the ordinary rules of statutory construction apply. Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979).

Statutes to Be Interpreted From Intent of Whole Act — Dangerous Drug Act: Defendant's contention based on a strict interpretation of one section of the Dangerous Drug Act would totally defeat the legislative intent behind the Act. Statutes must be read and considered in their entirety, and legislative intent may not be gained from the wording of one particular section or sentence but only from a consideration of the whole. The court's duty is to interpret individual sections of the Act in such a manner as to insure coordination with the other sections of the Act. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979).

Reasonableness — Agency's Interpretation — Legislative History: A reasonable construction of a statute must be adopted if possible. Great deference must be shown to the interpretation given the statute by the officers or agency charged with its administration. Although the intent of the Legislature must first be determined from the plain meaning of the words used, a court can resort to the history of the statute. Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978).

Credit for Out-of-State Service: Section 75-2705(9), R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), as in effect in 1954, allowed any teacher in the Montana State Teachers' Retirement System to receive credit for "out-of-state teaching employment", without distinction between service in public or in private schools. State ex rel. Sullivan v. St., 174 M 482, 571 P2d 793 (1977).

Rules of Statutory Construction: Rules of statutory construction have no application if the language of the statute is clear and unambiguous. State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977).

Medical Information — Not a Condition Precedent to Attorneys' Fees: When the statute did not specifically require medical information to be furnished prior to an award of attorneys' fees, the Supreme Court would not read that requirement into the statute. Myers v. 4 B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977).

Mutilation of Statute — Presumption Against: In the absence of a saving clause, the presumption is against the mutilation of a statute. The invalidation of one portion of a statute therefore destroys the whole. When corporation license tax was repealed as to federal banks, it was also repealed as to state banks. Sec. Bank & Trust Co. v. Connors, 170 M 59, 550 P2d 1313 (1976).

Court Not to Amend Statute:

The court could not add to the tax statutes a provision granting a special tax status to breeding animals. In re Armstrong's Estate, 133 M 328, 323 P2d 595 (1958).

Supreme Court is not at liberty to amend a statute as passed by the Legislature and approved by the Governor. It must determine the plain meaning of the words used and is not at liberty to add in the statute what has been omitted. In re Coleman's Estate, 132 M 339, 317 P2d 880 (1957).

Separability of Statutes: The requirement that a statute that contains several provisions will be construed to give effect to all does not mean that if it is not possible to give effect to all the court shall give effect to none. It means that as many as possible shall be given effect and not that they shall all stand or fall together. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Glacier Park Co., 118 M 205, 164 P2d 366 (1945).

Court to Ascertain Meaning:

In construing a statute, the office of the Judge is to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted or to omit what has been inserted; he may not indulge in judicial legislation. Taylor v. Rann, 106 M 588, 80 P2d 376 (1938).

In the construction of a statute it is not permissible to read something into or out of it to make it understandable or workable. In re Baxter's Estate, 101 M 504, 54 P2d 869 (1936).

The duty of the Supreme Court in interpreting a statute is not to enact but to expound the law, to apply the law as it finds it, and to maintain its integrity as it is written. It may not insert what has been omitted or omit what has been inserted. State ex rel. King v. Smith, 98 M 171, 38 P2d 274 (1934); Clark v. Olson, 96 M 417, 31 P2d 283 (1934).

In construing a statute the Supreme Court will not read into it words necessary to make it conform to a supposed intention of the Legislature; its intention in enacting it must be gathered from the language employed therein, not from street rumors or other similar sources. Mills v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 97 M 13, 33 P2d 563 (1934).

In construing a statute, the office of courts is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to write into the act words which the Legislature saw fit to omit. Maki v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 87 M 314, 287 P 170 (1930); Morrison v. Farmers' & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924).

Unambiguous — No Room for Construction: It is the province of courts to construe and apply the law as they find it and to maintain its integrity as it has been written by a coordinate branch of the state government. When the terms of a statute are plain, unambiguous, direct, and certain, it speaks for itself and there is no room for construction. Chmielewska v. Butte & Superior Min. Co., 81 M 36, 261 P 616 (1927).

Ordinary and Usual Meaning: The language of a statute must be construed in accordance with its usual and ordinary acceptation, with a view to giving vitality to and making operative all provisions of the law and accomplishing the intention of the Legislature when ascertainable. Hill County v. Liberty County, 62 M 15, 203 P 500 (1921).

Attorney General's Opinions

Statement of Intent Not to Be Used in Interpretation of Clearly Written Statute: Chapter 452, L. 1981, made several substantive changes in the laws relating to health service corporations. The bill's statement of intent, adopted under 5-4-404 (now repealed), stated that certain provisions of the bill were to be implemented only if additional funds were appropriated for their implementation. The Attorney General applied the rule of statutory interpretation that when legislative intent can be determined from a reading of a statute, it is improper to go further in construing the meaning of that statute, and held that the clear meaning of the law must be carried out, regardless of the contents of the statement of intent. 39 A.G. Op. 68 (1982).

Implied Amendment: When the Legislature allowed the Board of Abstracters to "sunset", it impliedly amended another section to remove a requirement that a certificate of title be prepared by a "licensed" abstracter. Although amendments or repeals by implication are not favored, such an amendment or repeal is present where two statutory enactments are clearly repugnant to each other. 38 A.G. Op. 48 (1979).

Rules of Construction Applied to Referendums: The rules of construction applied to statutes passed by the Legislature are equally applicable to laws enacted by referendum. 38 A.G. Op. 15 (1979).

Local Government Charter Requirements for General Election: The positions on the Anaconda-Deer Lodge Commission are subject to election at the primary and general elections to be held in 1978 and 1980, even though the charter creating the positions was implemented by the community in April 1977. 37 A.G. Op. 124 (1978).

Declaration of Marriage Without Solemnization: A marriage license is not a requirement for a valid marriage by written declaration. No fee may be charged for filing the declaration of marriage without solemnization. 37 A.G. Op. 12 (1977).

Insertion of Words Prohibited: This section prohibits insertion of words in a code section to reach a particular construction. 28 A.G. Op. 21 (1959).

Case Notes

Failure to Consult With Subdivider Not Error When Plat Application Denied — Plain Meaning Rule: When the Gallatin County Board of County Commissioners denied an application for approval of a subdivision, it was not error for the Board to refuse to consult with the subdivider regarding mitigation. Under the language of 76-3-608, and in accordance with the plain meaning rule of interpreting statutes, consultation with the subdivider is required only when mitigation is required. MM&I, LLC v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2010 MT 274, 358 Mont. 420, 246 P.3d 1029.

Protracted Impairment as Part of Definition of Serious Bodily Injury Not Unconstitutionally Vague: Trull contended that the term "protracted impairment" as part of the definition of serious bodily injury was constitutionally vague and that the use of the phrase "serious bodily injury" in the aggravated assault statute was therefore misleading. Assuming the constitutionality of the statute, the Supreme Court held that the terms "protracted" and "impairment" are not obscure or incomprehensible and are terms of common usage that the jury could understand. The jury found that during the assault, Trull inflicted a serious bodily injury resulting in a protracted impairment of the victim's vision, and the court declined to disturb the verdict based on vague or misleading definitions in the aggravated assault statute. St. v. Trull, 2006 MT 119, 332 M 233, 136 P3d 551 (2006).

Predispositional Psychosexual Evaluation Without Youth's Consent Authorized Only as Part of Court Disposition — Consideration of Prior Youth Court Offenses Allowed: The Youth Court, over a youth's objection, ordered a psychosexual evaluation for the youth. The specific language of 41-5-1503 controlled over the more general provisions of 41-5-1511. The Supreme Court held that under 41-5-1503, youths must waive their constitutional rights in order to be subjected to a predispositional medical or psychological evaluation. Thus, the District Court erred in ordering a predispositional psychosexual evaluation over the youth's objection. However, the challenged evaluation was essential to the youth's appropriate placement and to the purposes of the Montana Youth Court Act, so the Supreme Court affirmed. State ex rel. D.M.B. v. District Court, 2004 MT 335, 324 M 190, 103 P3d 514 (2004).

Challenge to Driver's License Suspension Considered Special Proceeding — Successful Defendant Entitled to Costs: Neal's driver's license was suspended for failure to take a breath test. Neal challenged the suspension, claiming that he did not refuse to take a breath test, and the District Court agreed. Neal's license was reinstated and Neal was granted costs. The state objected to the award of costs, and the District Court amended the original order and denied costs, so Neal appealed. Neal contended that as the prevailing party, an award of costs was proper under 25-10-101(2) because the license was valued at more than $50 or under 25-10-101(4) because the petition to reinstate the license was a special proceeding. The state contended that the particular provisions of 25-10-711 prevailed over the general provisions of 25-10-101, so 25-10-101 did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding no inconsistency between the statutes. Section 25-10-711 applies to actions in which a party prevails against a government entity and can establish that the government's claim or defense was frivolous or pursued in bad faith, but no such finding is required for recovery of costs under 25-10-101. The court went on to find that Neal's claim that costs were proper based on the license value was unfounded, because no finding of valuation was ever determined. However, the court concluded that a challenge to a driver's license suspension or revocation was a special proceeding pursuant to 27-1-102, and that as the prevailing party in the action, Neal was entitled to costs pursuant to 25-10-101. Neal v. St., 2003 MT 53, 314 M 357, 66 P3d 280 (2003).

Specific Statute Governing Venue in Contract Cases Controlling Over General Civil Venue Statute — Remand for Determination of Place Where Services to Be Performed Under Terms of Contract: Defendant hired plaintiff to perform legal services. About 1 month later, plaintiff was terminated, but defendant refused to pay for plaintiff's work. The District Court determined that under 25-2-118, proper venue was the place where defendant resided. The court also examined 25-2-121 and held that because the action was a contract action, 25-2-121(1)(a) dictated that the action be held at the place of defendant's residence. Because the action was based on a contract, the specific provisions of 25-2-121 prevailed over the general venue provisions for civil actions in 25-2-118. The District Court neglected to consider 25-2-121(1)(b), which provides that a proper venue for contract actions may also be the county in which the contract was to be performed. Here, the record contained no written contracts for legal services, so the Supreme Court was unable to determine whether specific performance provisions had been included in the contract. The case was remanded so that the District Court could determine whether a specific place of performance was named in the contract, in which case the proper venue would be the named county or the county of residence of defendant. However, if there were no written contracts or if no specific place of performance was named, then proper venue would be the place where the services were performed or the county of residence of defendant. Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Board of County Commissioners Compelled to Follow Clear Statutory Language and Allow Gravel Pit in Nonresidential Area: Plaintiff owned agricultural property adjacent to a school and sought to develop a gravel pit on the property. Plaintiff applied for the appropriate special review with the Board of County Commissioners. The Board determined that a gravel pit would interfere with surrounding property uses and would violate the rights of people who lived and attended school nearby to a clean and healthful environment, citing 82-4-431 and 82-4-432 as authority for the Board's right to deny the special review. Plaintiff argued that under 76-1-113 and 76-2-209, local planning boards may not prevent the operation of a gravel pit in a nonresidential area. The District Court concluded that plaintiff accurately construed the statutes and that the Board could not deny a gravel pit in a nonresidential area. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Board ruled as if either 76-2-209 did not exist or the statute unconstitutionally deprived residents of a clean and healthful environment, but as an Executive Branch agency, the Board violated the separation of powers doctrine by ruling on the constitutionality of the statute. The statutory language was clear and unambiguous, and the Board was compelled to follow the legal mandate and allow the gravel pit. Further, because the statutes were clear, the District Court was not required to reach the constitutional question and did not err in failing to address the constitutionality of the statute. Merlin Myers Revocable Trust v. Yellowstone County, 2002 MT 201, 311 M 194, 53 P3d 1268 (2002). See also St. v. Still, 273 M 261, 902 P2d 546 (1995), and Goldman Sachs v. District Court, 2002 MT 83, 309 M 289, 46 P3d 606 (2002).

Standard of Review for Statutes Applicable to Administrative Rules — Rules of Statutory Construction Inapplicable Absent Ambiguity in Statute or Rule — Deference Afforded Longstanding Agency Interpretation of Administrative Rule: The Supreme Court generally applies the same principles in construing administrative rules as it applies to statutes. If the plain meaning of a statute or rule can be determined from the language used, the court is not at liberty to add or detract from the language, and absent ambiguity in the language, the court may not consider legislative history or other means of statutory construction. When an agency's interpretation of an administrative rule or statute has stood unchallenged for a considerable length of time, it will be regarded as having great importance in arriving at the proper construction. However, even when a particular meaning has been ascribed to a statute by an agency through a long and continuous course of consistent interpretation, that interpretation will be afforded respectful consideration but is still not binding on the courts. Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002).

Joint Bankruptcy Debtors Allowed to Claim Separate Exemption of Interest in Jointly Owned Personal Property: Three married couples filed similar joint bankruptcy petitions wherein each spouse claimed a separate set of personal property exemptions pursuant to 25-13-609. The bankruptcy trustee objected to the claimed objections in each case, contending that joint debtors were limited to a single set of exemptions. The U.S. Bankruptcy Court certified the question to the Montana Supreme Court. The court held that the specific provisions of 31-2-106 control over the general personal property exemptions available to judgment debtors in 25-13-609. Section 31-2-106 allows each individual to claim the allowable exemptions in any bankruptcy proceeding. Because each joint debtor maintains an interest in jointly held personal property, each may claim a separate exemption of personal interest in that property, essentially stacking the two exemptions in one item of personal property. However, in cases when the personal property is owned solely by one of the joint debtors, only the debtor with the ownership interest may claim an exemption for that property. In re Zimmermann, Landon, & Maly, 2002 MT 90, 309 M 337, 46 P3d 599 (2002).

No Authority to Appeal Justice's Court Order Denying Motion to Withdraw Guilty Plea: The Feights got into a fight with a highway patrol officer at a high school basketball game and were charged with misdemeanor assault. They were informed of their rights in Justice's Court, waived their right to counsel, and pleaded guilty. More than a month later, they moved through counsel to withdraw their guilty pleas, claiming good cause under 46-16-105. The Justice's Court denied the motion, holding that the Feights had been given due process and had voluntarily, knowingly, and willingly entered guilty pleas. The Feights appealed the denial of their motion to withdraw their guilty pleas to District Court. The state moved to dismiss the appeal, contending that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to review denial of the motion to withdraw a plea. The District Court dismissed the appeal but remanded to Justice's Court with a recommendation that the Feights be allowed to withdraw their pleas. Instead, the Justice's Court reinstated judgment, and the Feights appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court affirmed. The statutes that provide for and determine the jurisdiction of a District Court to entertain an appeal from a Justice's Court include 3-5-303, 46-12-204, 46-17-203, and 46-17-311. However, none of these statutes provide authority for appeal to the District Court from the denial of a motion to withdraw a guilty plea. Further, the specific language of these sections prevails over the general language in 46-20-104 defining the scope of appeal by a criminal defendant. The Legislature has not created a statutory right of appeal from a Justice's Court denial of a motion to withdraw a guilty plea, and the Supreme Court refrained from creating one. St. v. Feight, 2001 MT 205, 306 M 312, 33 P3d 623 (2001), distinguishing St. v. Rogers, 267 M 190, 883 P2d 115 (1994), and followed in St. v. Fox, 2001 MT 209, 306 M 353, 34 P3d 484 (2001).

"Savings Clause" Preserves Existing Statute of Limitations for Debt Collection: After borrowing $25,000 from a Billings bank in the form of a demand note with a March 1, 1991, maturity date, plaintiff Fisher defaulted on the note. The bank attempted to collect the delinquent note, notifying Fisher that the 8-year statute of limitations had not run. Fisher subsequently filed a complaint against the bank, alleging that in conjunction with other modifications to Montana's commercial code, an amendment by the 1991 Legislature, which became effective more than 6 months after his loan default, had shortened the statute of limitations to 6 years. As a result, Fisher argued that the new statute of limitations applied to remove his liability to pay the note. The District Court did not concur with Fisher's assessment, ruling that the applicable statute was the 8-year statute of limitations in effect at the time of default. On appeal, the dispute centered solely around which statute of limitations applied. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that the savings clause included in the amendments by the 1991 Legislature preserved the 8-year statute of limitations in effect as of the maturity date of the note. Fisher v. First Citizens Bank, 2000 MT 314, 302 M 473, 14 P3d 1228, 57 St. Rep. 1331 (2000).

Policy Definitions Conflicting With Incontestability Provision — Assertion of Forman Defense Violative of Montana Law: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserts a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy). The District Court declined to decide the issue of the legality of Revere's disability policy, holding that Revere was entitled to assert the Forman defense and that any opinion concerning the interpretation of the policy would be an inappropriate advisory opinion. The Supreme Court found that the question of whether the policy definitions conflicted with the statutorily required incontestability clause was a question of law on which Deonier's punitive damages claim rested and thus did not constitute an inappropriate advisory opinion. Because the incontestability clause is required by statute, interpretation of language in the clause must be construed to effectuate legislative intent, not the intent of the parties, and the incontestability clause takes precedence over other language in the policy. In this case, the definitional and coverage provisions purported to limit available coverage to disabilities caused by sickness or disease that first manifested after the date on which the policy was issued and to exclude coverage for preexisting conditions that were not disclosed on the application; at the same time, the incontestability clause barred the insurer from denying coverage because a sickness or physical condition had existed before the date on which the policy was issued, creating a conflict in which the incontestability clause must control. Consequently, Revere's assertion of the Forman defense violated Montana law, and denial of coverage for a disability, whether or not the causative sickness first manifested itself before the policy's date of issue, was barred by the incontestability clause. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000), following Galanty v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 1 P3d 658 (Calif. 2000).

Civil Procedure Rule That Notice of Entry of Order Be Served by Prevailing Party Inapplicable in Postconviction Relief Proceeding: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court addressed whether the notice of entry of judgment requirement under former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), applied to postconviction relief proceedings governed by Title 46, ch. 21. The court previously held in cases unrelated to postconviction proceedings that only when the notice is served does a prospective appellant's time for filing a notice of appeal begin to run. (See In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989), Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).) Here, Garner was convicted of forgery and felony theft and contended that because the state was the "prevailing party", notice should have been provided to him of the entry of the District Court's order and that because notice was not provided, the 60 days within which to appeal could not have expired because it never commenced to run. However, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply in a postconviction relief proceeding only when they are applicable and not inconsistent with postconviction statutes. Section 46-21-203 specifically requires that an appeal in postconviction proceedings be taken within 60 days of the entry of the order, which is inconsistent with the general notice rule in former Rule 77(d). The Supreme Court applied the particular provision over the general provision and concluded that former Rule 77(d) has no application in postconviction relief proceedings, so the 60-day filing deadline in 46-21-203 commences in all instances and without more upon entry of the court's order granting or denying postconviction relief. St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Constitutionality of Implied Consent Statutes — General Versus Specific Construction: Section 61-8-403 is a general statute concerning appeals of suspensions and revocations of driver's licenses under the implied consent laws, while 61-8-409 is the specific statute on preliminary alcohol screening tests (PAST), including issues that may be discussed at hearings on license suspension or revocation based upon refusal to submit to a PAST. A specific statute prevails over a general statute. Appellant's contention of conflict among Montana's implied consent statutes was not established because the various provisions are clear and specific and give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that the contemplated conduct is forbidden. Smith v. St., 1998 MT 94, 288 M 383, 958 P2d 677, 55 St. Rep. 375 (1998).

Conflicting Statutes of Limitations Resolved in Favor of Longer Limitation — General Rule: As a general rule, when there is a substantial question regarding which of two statutes of limitations should apply, any doubt should be resolved in favor of the statute containing the longer limitation in order to afford a plaintiff party-litigant maximum free access to the court system. Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175, 50 St. Rep. 1183 (1993).

Specific Intent to Place Referendum on Primary Ballot as Overriding General Filing Time Provisions: Petitioners argued that because a legislative referendum was passed less than 6 months before the special election at which it was, by order of the Legislature, to be placed on the ballot and because the referendum was therefore necessarily submitted to the Attorney General less than the 6 months before the election required by 13-27-310(2) (now repealed), it should be removed from the ballot as violative of the time constraints in 13-27-310(2) (now repealed). However, the statement of particular intent in the referendum that the measure appear on the special election ballot controlled over the statement of general intent in 13-27-310 (now repealed), and a petition for a writ of injunction preventing placement of the measure on the ballot was therefore denied. State ex rel. Gould v. Cooney, 253 M 90, 831 P2d 593, 49 St. Rep. 410 (1992).

Leasing of Fairground Property Controlled by Specific Versus General Statute: The Supreme Court held that an obvious conflict existed between general statutes concerning the leasing of county property and the specific statute dealing with the leasing of fairground property. The court stated that in interpreting conflicting statutes, the specific controls over the general to the extent of any inconsistency. Gallatin Saddle & Harness Club v. White, 246 M 273, 805 P2d 1299, 47 St. Rep. 2012 (1990).

Statute Specific to Teachers Controls: The plaintiff argued that his firing should be set aside on the basis that he was not given a statement for his discharge as required by 39-2-801. The Supreme Court ruled that the section of law relied on by the plaintiff applied generally to employees in general commerce and that the specific statute relating to termination of teachers was controlling. Harris v. Bailey, 244 M 279, 798 P2d 96, 47 St. Rep. 1622 (1990).

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Claim of Assault and Battery: Although a strict reading of 27-2-204 may present some conflict between subsections (1) and (3), the legislative intent was to establish a general 3-year statute of limitations for tort actions with a shorter 2-year period for certain particular tort actions, such as assault and battery. The District Court properly applied the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204(3) when the complaint alleged "assault and battery". Weston v. Cole, 233 M 61, 758 P2d 289, 45 St. Rep. 1292 (1988).

Rating of Impairments Restricted to Licensed Physicians: Under 39-71-122 (repealed, 1987) and 39-71-701 through 39-71-703, the legislative intent was that the making of impairment ratings be restricted to licensed medical physicians. Therefore, the Workers' Compensation Division properly exercised its rulemaking authority by promulgating ARM 24.29.806 (now repealed), which imposes the restriction. Weis v. Div. of Workers' Comp., 232 M 218, 755 P2d 1385, 45 St. Rep. 1004 (1988).

Agency Interpretation Contrary to Legislative Intent — Effect on Conclusions of Law: Conclusions of law will be upheld unless they constitute an abuse of discretion. An abuse of discretion results if an agency's interpretation of a statute is clearly contrary to legislative intent behind the statute. Swan Corp. v. Dept. of Revenue, 232 M 210, 755 P2d 1388, 45 St. Rep. 998 (1988).

Executive Constructions: Executive constructions of a law acquiesced in by the Legislature are not binding on the court but are persuasive and will be upheld if not erroneous. Cornwall v. St., 231 M 58, 752 P2d 135, 45 St. Rep. 429 (1988), citing State ex rel. Ebel v. Schye, 130 M 537, 305 P2d 350 (1957).

Specific Provisions Outweigh General in Same Section: In construing the apparently conflicting venue provisions of 25-2-118(2) and 25-2-118(3), the Supreme Court held that, as related to dissolution proceedings, the specific provisions in subsection (3) outweigh the general provisions of subsection (2). Therefore, the proper place for trial for an action for dissolution of marriage is the county where the petitioner has resided during the 90 days preceding commencement of the action. In re Marriage of Jones, 226 M 14, 736 P2d 94, 44 St. Rep. 422 (1987).

Reasonable Construction of Whole Statute Without Inserting or Omitting Anything: In construing a statute, the court must find legislative intent from the plain meaning by reasonably and logically interpreting the statute as a whole without omitting or inserting anything or determining intent from a reading of only a part of the statute. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

Review of Bill's Title — First Step in Construction:

If a statute requires construction, a review of the title of the original bill is a necessary first step to aid that construction. In this case, a bill's title showed that the parents, guardian, or other responsible person was liable for a minor driver's negligence unless he signed the minor's application for a driver's license and provided proof of financial responsibility. The court would not look at a particular part of the whole statute and read it, as did appellant, to provide that there was no liability if a parent or guardian signed and provided proof, but that there was liability if both parents or some other responsible person signed and provided proof. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

First step in determining the purpose of a statute is an examination of the title of the act through which the statute was introduced. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Clark Fork Logging Co., Inc., 198 M 494, 646 P2d 1207, 39 St. Rep. 1146 (1982).

Ambiguous Provision — Harmonizing Statutes — Legislative History — Administrative Interpretation: Legislative intent may be determined in a number of ways when a statute is ambiguous. The court presumes the Legislature would not pass a meaningless statute, and the court must harmonize statutes relating to the same subject so as to give each effect. The court can look to the legislative history of the statute. Great deference and respect must be given to interpretation of the statute by persons and agencies charged with its administration. Mont. Contractors' Ass'n, Inc. v. Dept. of Highways, 220 M 392, 715 P2d 1056, 43 St. Rep. 470 (1986), followed in Albright v. St., 281 M 196, 933 P2d 815, 54 St. Rep. 132 (1997). Albright was followed in Winchell v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 1999 MT 11, 293 M 89, 972 P2d 1132, 56 St. Rep. 48 (1999).

Return of Property — Conflict Between Civil and Criminal Statutes: When property is taken from a pawnbroker and held as evidence for an underlying criminal prosecution, the provisions of the criminal procedure statutes governing return of property apply rather than the civil pawnbroker statutes. The criminal statutes are the particular and specific statutes and the pawnbroker statutes are general. The pawnbroker statutes control the situation where a private citizen discovers his property at a pawnbroker's shop and no criminal prosecution grows out of the incident. In re Williams, 219 M 6, 709 P2d 1008, 42 St. Rep. 1800 (1985).

Extension Within Reasonable Time of Expiration of Period: In October 1981, the Flathead County Commissioners gave preliminary 1-year approval to a subdivision plat. In December 1982, the developer requested an extension to preliminary approval. On January 14, 1983, the Commissioners approved the extension. Plaintiff filed a complaint alleging 76-3-610 precluded the Commissioners from granting an extension to the preliminary approval after the original time period had run. The District Court dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the phrase "At the end of" in the statute meant by or before the period in question expires and not after the expiration. The Supreme Court held that the plain meaning of the statute was evident in the language used. The statute permits County Commissioners to grant an extension to a preliminary plat approval within a reasonable time of the expiration of that period. Oldenburg v. Flathead County, 208 M 128, 676 P2d 778, 41 St. Rep. 217 (1984).

Legislative Intent — Plain Meaning: Plaintiff was not allowed to gather signatures for an initiative petition on a general election day in a school building used as a polling place. The school district had a general policy prohibiting solicitation of any kind in school buildings. Plaintiff contended the policy violated 13-35-218 by prohibiting solicitation permitted by that section. The Supreme Court held that its function in construing and applying statutes is to effect legislative intent. The primary tool for ascertaining intent is the plain meaning of the words used. The court properly refers to legislative history only when intent cannot be determined from the content of the statute. Section 13-35-218 did not necessitate such an inquiry. The court held that it clearly and unambiguously proscribes a manner of solicitation which results in interference with the election process or obstructing access to and from the polls but in no way guarantees access to persons whose solicitation effects no interference or obstruction. The most that can be said is that some manner of solicitation at polling places on election day may be permitted. Dorn v. Bd. of Trustees, 203 M 136, 661 P2d 426, 40 St. Rep. 348 (1983).

Legislative History — Not Used When Statute Clear and Unambiguous: There is no reason for the use of legislative history to construe a statute when the language of the statute is clear and unambiguous on its face. St. v. Hubbard, 200 M 106, 649 P2d 1331, 39 St. Rep. 1608 (1982).

Single Word Not to Be Used to Find Intent: A statute's intent cannot be derived from the definition of one word; a statute derives its meaning from the entire body of words taken together. Wyse v. District Court, 195 M 434, 636 P2d 865, 38 St. Rep. 2005 (1981).

Other Interpretations Barred if Plain Meaning Shows Intent: The intention of the Legislature must first be determined from the plain meaning of the words used, and if the interpretation of a statute can be so determined, the courts cannot apply any other means of interpretation; plain, unambiguous, direct, and certain language leaves nothing for the court to construe. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981).

Two-Judge Disqualification Unavailable to Postconviction Petitioner: Although a postconviction petition filed under the provisions of Title 46, ch. 21, is civil in nature, the petitioner is not entitled to two substitutions of presiding judges as allowed in 3-1-801 (now replaced by 3-1-802). An applicant for postconviction relief is directed by the more specific provisions of the postconviction statute to bring the petition in the Supreme Court or in the court that sentenced him. A specific statute controls over a general statute. Coleman v. St., 194 M 428, 633 P2d 624, 38 St. Rep. 1352 (1981).

Appeal From Tax Appeal Ruling — Applicable Procedure: The Department of Revenue audited respondent's corporate license tax returns and assessed additional taxes. Respondent protested the assessment and appealed to the State Tax Appeal Board (STAB). After a hearing, STAB affirmed the Department's decision. Respondent filed for judicial review of the STAB decision in District Court. Respondent mailed a copy of the summons and petition to the attorney who represented the Department at the hearing and to STAB. The respondent received a default judgment and a reversal of STAB's final order. The Department contends that respondent failed to comply with 2-4-702 and thereby failed to obtain jurisdiction over the Department. Respondent asserts that 15-2-303 is the applicable statute, in that 2-4-702 provides the procedure for initiating judicial review of agency decisions in contested cases, while 15-2-303 provides appeal procedures for initiating judicial review of STAB decisions. Section 15-2-303 is a specific statute while 2-4-702 is general. A specific statute controls over a general statute to the extent of any inconsistency. Dept. of Revenue v. Davidson Cattle Co., 190 M 326, 620 P2d 1232, 37 St. Rep. 2074 (1980).

Sexual Assault Erroneously Dismissed — "Sexual Contact" Construed: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's decision to grant defendant's motion for dismissal under 46-16-403 of a sexual assault charge and held that the sexual contact proscribed by 45-5-502 is not limited to a touching of the anal or genital area of a male or female or the breast of a female. Looking to the purpose of the statute, the court found that the definition of "sexual contact" encompasses the rubbing of the belly and chest of a prepubescent female child because of the societal concern for such impositions and their resultant outrage, disgust, or shame in the victim. St. v. Weese, 189 M 464, 616 P2d 371, 37 St. Rep. 1620 (1980).

Interpretation Consistent With Intent of Legislature: While a statute may have some ambiguities due to a large variety of possible situations that are covered by a statute, a court is not required under due process standards to find vagueness in the terms used in a statute so as to destroy an act; rather, it is the court's duty to construe a statute so as to be consistent with the will of the Legislature and to comport with constitutional limitations. In re Mont. Pac. Oil & Gas Co., 189 M 11, 614 P2d 1045 (1980), citing CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 US 548, 37 L Ed 2d 796, 93 S Ct 2880 (1973).

Statutory Construction to Follow Legislative Intent: A statute must be construed pursuant to its legislative intent. Thus, 7-14-2601, requiring either any 10 or a majority of freeholders within a road district to sign a petition for abandonment of a county road, could not be construed to change "a majority of freeholders in a district" to "a majority of those directly affected" by a road abandonment, even though the road district in this instance was comprised of an entire county consisting of 40,000 residents. Chennault v. Sager, 187 M 455, 610 P2d 173 (1980).

Object Sought to Be Achieved: A statute will not be interpreted to defeat its object or purpose, and the object sought to be achieved by the Legislature is of prime consideration in interpreting it. Dover Ranch v. Yellowstone County, 187 M 276, 609 P2d 711 (1980).

Intent of Legislature Controlling: The cardinal principle of statutory construction is that the intent of the Legislature is controlling. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979), following Baker Nat'l Ins. Agency v. Dept. of Revenue, 175 M 9, 571 P2d 1156 (1977).

Statutes to Be Interpreted From Intent of Whole Act — Dangerous Drug Act: Defendant's contention based on a strict interpretation of one section of the Dangerous Drug Act would totally defeat the legislative intent behind the Act. Statutes must be read and considered in their entirety, and legislative intent may not be gained from the wording of one particular section or sentence but only from a consideration of the whole. The court's duty is to interpret individual sections of the Act in such a manner as to insure coordination with the other sections of the Act. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979).

Legislative Intent — Implied Repeal of General Statutes by Later Comprehensive Act: While implied repeals are not favored where an irreconcilable conflict exists between earlier and later statutes, the courts do not hesitate to declare the earlier statute repealed, especially if the later act is a comprehensive act establishing elaborate inclusions and exclusions of persons, things, and relationships ordinarily associated with the subject. In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Prosecution When Conduct Violates Two Statutes: Where defendant argues that he should have been charged under 30-10-301, the specific fraudulent securities practice statute, rather than 45-6-317, the general deceptive practices statute, the Supreme Court said that in the rule of statutory construction a more specific statute controls over an inconsistent general statute but does not apply to criminal prosecutions where defendant's conduct violated two or more criminal statutes. The fact that two statutes overlap does not mean that the defendant can only be prosecuted under the statute providing the lesser penalty. St. v. Duncan, 181 M 382, 593 P2d 1026 (1979).

Title of Act — Presumption as to Intent — Legislative History: The title of an act is presumed to indicate the Legislature's intent. Although the intent of the Legislature must first be determined from the plain meaning of the words used, a court can resort to the history of the statute. Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978), followed, as to the title of an act presumed to indicate legislative intent, in Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106 P3d 100 (2004).

Examining Legislative Intent: In applying the principle of statutory construction that the intent of the Legislature is controlling, the Supreme Court examined the committee records of the House Ways and Means Committee maintained in conjunction with the consideration of and the ultimate passage of 15-31-141. Baker Nat'l Ins. Agency v. Dept. of Revenue, 175 M 9, 571 P2d 1156 (1977).

Credit for Out-of-State Service: Section 75-2705(9), R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), as in effect in 1954, allowed any teacher in the Montana State Teachers' Retirement System to receive credit for "out-of-state teaching employment", without distinction between service in public or in private schools. State ex rel. Sullivan v. St., 174 M 482, 571 P2d 793 (1977).

Rules of Statutory Construction: Rules of statutory construction have no application if the language of the statute is clear and unambiguous. State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977).

Mutilation of Statute — Presumption Against: In the absence of a saving clause, the presumption is against the mutilation of a statute. The invalidation of one portion of a statute therefore destroys the whole. When corporation license tax was repealed as to federal banks, it was also repealed as to state banks. Sec. Bank & Trust Co. v. Connors, 170 M 59, 550 P2d 1313 (1976).

Special Controls General:

Particular intent will control a general one in statute relating to life insurance as part of estate. In re Coleman's Estate, 132 M 339, 317 P2d 880 (1957).

In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature must be pursued, if possible; and when a general and a particular provision are inconsistent, the latter is paramount to the former. O'Connell v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 95 M 91, 25 P2d 114 (1933), explained in St. v. Toomey, 135 M 35, 335 P2d 1051 (1958); London Guar. & Accident Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 82 M 304, 266 P 1103 (1928).

Where one statute deals with a subject in general and comprehensive terms, and another deals with a part of the same subject in a more minute and definite way, the latter will prevail over the former to the extent of any necessary repugnancy between them. In re Stevenson's Estate, 87 M 486, 289 P 566 (1930); Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

Where a statute deals generally with a given subject and a later one makes specific provision relating to a certain phase of that subject inconsistent with the former, the latter is controlling. Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927).

Where there is a general and a special statutory provision upon a given subject which cannot be harmonized, the special one is controlling, and if the latter is found to be inoperative, resort may be had to the general law with a view to harmonizing them and, if possible, making the later special act operative. State ex rel. Ewald v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 71 M 79, 227 P 472 (1924).

County Commissioners' Action: Rules of construction prescribed by this section would be applicable in construing action of Board of County Commissioners in fixing salary of county officer. State ex rel. Thompson v. Gallatin County, 120 M 263, 184 P2d 998 (1947). See also Mesa Communications Group, LLC v. Yellowstone County, 2002 MT 73, 309 M 233, 45 P3d 37 (2002).

Legislative Intent: In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature is to be pursued if possible. State ex rel. Nagle v. The Leader Co., 97 M 586, 37 P2d 561 (1934); State ex rel. Kurth v. Grinde, 96 M 608, 32 P2d 15 (1934); Cottonwood Coal Co. v. Junod, 73 M 392, 236 P 1080 (1925); Wibaux Improvement Co. v. Breitenfeldt, 67 M 206, 215 P 222 (1923); State ex rel. Carter v. Kall, 53 M 162, 162 P 385 (1917); Lerch v. Missoula Brick & Tile Co., 45 M 314, 123 P 25 (1912).

Language Employed — Purpose to Be Served: In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature must control, and to ascertain that intention, recourse must first be had to the language employed and the apparent purpose to be served. O'Connell v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 95 M 91, 25 P2d 114 (1933); Campbell v. Helena, 92 M 366, 16 P2d 1 (1932); McNair v. School District, 87 M 423, 288 P 188 (1930).

Liquor Law: In construing provisions of the liquor law, the intention of the Legislature must be pursued so far as possible, and the language employed must be interpreted in accordance with its usual, ordinary, and accepted meaning so as to give it validity and make operative all of its provisions, particular words and phrases being construed according to the context and their approved usage. St. v. Redmond, 73 M 376, 237 P 486 (1925).

Doubtful Language — Refer to History of the Times: In the construction of a statute, the intent of the Legislature must be pursued, if possible, and if its language is of doubtful meaning, courts may refer to the history of the times when it was passed and of the act itself in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of particular provisions in it. Fergus Motor Co. v. Sorenson, 73 M 122, 235 P 422 (1925).

Words Employed — Evil to Be Remedied: In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature must be pursued. The legislative intent is determined by examining the words used and the evil to be remedied. State ex rel. Boone v. Tullock, 72 M 482, 234 P 277 (1925).

Reconciling Laws: In the construction of a particular statute, all acts relating to the same subject or having the same general purpose should be read in connection with it, as together constituting one law, it being the duty of courts to reconcile them, if possible, and make them operative. State ex rel. Ewald v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 71 M 79, 227 P 472 (1924).

Language Indicates Intent: In the interpretation of statutes in the case of doubt as to the legislative intent which must control, recourse must first be had to the language employed, indulging the presumption that the terms used were intended to be understood in their ordinary sense unless it is apparent that they were intended to be given a different meaning, and then if there is room for doubt as to its intent, the title of the act, presumably indicating its intention, may be examined. Morrison v. Farmers' & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924).

Language Given Its Ordinary Meaning: The language of a statute must be construed in accordance with its usual and ordinary meaning with a view to giving vitality to and making operative all provisions of the law and accomplishing the intention of the Legislature when ascertainable. Hill County v. Liberty County, 62 M 15, 203 P 500 (1921).

Court to Harmonize Parts of Statute: Where one part of a statute deals with the subject in general and comprehensive terms, while another part deals with it in a more minute and definite way, the two parts should be read together and, if possible, harmonized with a view to giving effect to a consistent legislative policy. Butte v. Indus. Accident Bd., 52 M 75, 156 P 130 (1916); Stadler v. Helena, 46 M 128, 127 P 454 (1912).

Attorney General's Opinions

Conditions for Transfer of School District Bus Depreciation Reserve Fund: Resolving an apparent statutory conflict regarding the transfer of a school district bus depreciation reserve fund, a budgeted fund, the Attorney General applied the specific provisions of 20-10-147 over the general provisions of 20-9-201 and 20-9-208 in holding that before a school district may transfer any money in the district's bus depreciation reserve fund to any other district fund, the school district trustees must have sold all of the district's buses and submitted the proposed fund transfer to the electors of the district. 51 A.G. Op. 6 (2005).

Interpretation of Plumber Licensing Statutes by Board of Plumbers — Licensing Authority Restricted by Statute — Intention of Legislature — Penalty Statute Inapplicable: The Board of Plumbers has the legal authority to interpret Title 37, ch. 69, and the interpretation by the Board must be given deference unless it is incorrect. In interpreting the plumbing licensing statutes, the intent of the Legislature must be determined, and if that intent can be understood from a plain reading of the statutes, there is no need to look further. The statutes as well as the statutory history clearly indicated that a plumber's license is required only for a person who is: (1) working in the field of plumbing in an incorporated city or town; (2) working in the field of plumbing in an area served by a public water supply or sewer system; or (3) working in the field of plumbing and connects or disconnects plumbing to or from a public water supply or sewer system, unless an exemption is granted. There is no penalty applicable to an unlicensed person for whom a license is not required by statute. 47 A.G. Op. 21 (1998).

Penalties for Fraudulent Benefits Claim — Specific Remedy Controlling Over General Remedy: Although 17-8-231 (now repealed) appears to provide a penalty for fraudulent claiming of unemployment insurance benefits, that statute is a general one that provides a penalty in conflict with the more specific penalty provided under 39-51-3201. Because the more particular statute must control to the extent of any inconsistency, the Department of Labor and Industry is limited to recovery of those amounts of benefits wrongfully received by the claimant. The Department may not sue a claimant for all benefits paid to the claimant or for the additional penalty provided in 17-8-231 (now repealed), but may disqualify the claimant under 39-51-3201 from receipt of future benefits. 40 A.G. Op. 21 (1983).

Role of Montana Wheat Research and Marketing Committee: "Marketing" is to be interpreted in its broadest sense to include the transportation of goods, including transportation rates. The Montana Wheat Research and Marketing Committee may take action to assure reasonable transportation rates if it is in the best interest of the wheat and barley growers of Montana as a whole. 39 A.G. Op. 8 (1981).

Right of Access to Sealed Original Birth Records: Considering the legislative history, 50-15-206 (now repealed), as amended in 1979, prohibits disclosure of illegitimacy of birth or information from which illegitimacy can be ascertained except upon court order. This conflicts with 50-15-304, which would allow an adopted illegitimately born person access to his or her sealed original birth records upon demand. Section 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was enacted as part of a 1979 amendment to that section. Under 1-2-203, "the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment". Earlier statutes are controlled by later statutes when they conflict, so 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) controls. Additionally, when a specific statute conflicts with a general statute, the specific statute controls to the extent of any conflict. Under this rule of construction, 50-15-304 was considered the general statute dealing with the birth records of adopted persons, and 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was considered a more specific statute regulating disclosure of birth records of illegitimate adopted persons, the statute which controlled. Therefore, legitimately born adopted persons of legal age may have their sealed original birth records opened on demand while illegitimately born adopted persons may apply to court for disclosure of their sealed original birth records. 38 A.G. Op. 62 (1980).

Imprisonment in County Jail Upon Failure to Pay Traffic Fine: Both 46-19-102 and 61-8-711 concern imprisonment upon failure to pay fines for traffic offenses. Because a particular statute governs when a general statute and a particular statute on the same subject are inconsistent, 61-8-711 governs. However, if the failure to pay is based on indigency, constitutional issues arise. The courts have recognized the infirmity of imposing a fine as a sentence and then converting it into a jail term simply because the defendant is indigent and cannot forthwith pay the fine in full. 38 A.G. Op. 61 (1980).

Intent of Legislature in Allowing Board of Abstracters to Terminate: The Legislature, by allowing the Board of Abstracters to "sunset", by plain import of the statutory language involved, was not expressing the opinion that a certificate required by 76-3-612 was no longer necessary. Rather, it was a determination that the Board's licensing function did not meet the criteria set forth in 2-8-112. 38 A.G. Op. 48 (1979).

Implied Amendment: When the Legislature allowed the Board of Abstracters to "sunset", it impliedly amended another section to remove a requirement that a certificate of title be prepared by a "licensed" abstracter. Although amendments or repeals by implication are not favored, such an amendment or repeal is present where two statutory enactments are clearly repugnant to each other. 38 A.G. Op. 48 (1979).

Legislative Intent to Be Gathered From the Whole: When the Legislature allowed nonresident corporations to vote in elections for officers of a water and sewer district and allowed the combination of that election with the election on the question of creation of the district, the Legislature intended that nonresident corporations participate in the entire election process. 38 A.G. Op. 47 (1979).

Prisoner Voting Rights: No person may vote in the state of Montana while serving a sentence in a penal institution resulting from conviction of a felony. 37 A.G. Op. 125 (1978).

Municipal Annexation: If a proposed annexation of land having no resident freeholders meets the annexation standards of 7-2-4734, including the requirement that the area to be annexed is included in and consistent with a master community development plan previously adopted, and the city also complies with the PCDA planning and public hearing requirements of Title 7, ch. 2, part 47, the city may proceed under annexation procedures of Title 7, ch. 2, part 45. 37 A.G. Op. 119 (1978), overruling 36 A.G. Op. 72 (1976) insofar as it holds that the Planned Community Development Act of 1973, Title 7, ch. 2, part 47, repealed section 11-403, R.C.M. 1947.

Consolidated Law Enforcement Funding: Third-class cities or towns that have consolidated their police departments with county law enforcement offices may not use the funds received from the State Auditor under 19-10-305 (renumbered 19-19-305) to pay the county for their share of the consolidated law enforcement expense unless those funds are used exclusively for pensions and/or training. 37 A.G. Op. 117 (1978).

Taxation — Levy for Liability Insurance: The levy provided by 2-9-212 does not require an election. The school trustees may authorize the levy upon determining that it is in the best interests of the school district. The annual property tax may be used to fund all policies of insurance required or permitted by law. 37 A.G. Op. 109 (1978), reversing contrary language in 35 A.G. Op. 44 (1973).

Declaration of Marriage Without Solemnization: A marriage license is not a requirement for a valid marriage by written declaration. No fee may be charged for filing the declaration of marriage without solemnization. 37 A.G. Op. 12 (1977).

1-2-103. Statutes in derogation of the common law — liberal construction.

Case Notes

Implied Private Right of Action Under Consumer Loan Act: The Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA) does not specifically provide for or prohibit a private right of action. Defendant contended that 32-5-401 provides that the Department of Administration is the sole entity authorized to seek a violation of the CLA in the courts. Plaintiffs argued that the remedy provisions of the CLA indicated a legislative intent consistent with allowing a private right of action because the remedy of violating a loan benefits the borrower. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiffs that the CLA's remedial measures were not inconsistent with allowing a private right of action under the CLA. If only the Department of Administration could take action to enforce the CLA, there would be no need for 32-5-407 providing that a party could be awarded attorney fees in an action on a contract entered pursuant to the CLA, and if the Legislature had wished to prohibit a private cause of action, it could have done so. Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004). See also Somers v. Cherry Creek Dev., Inc., & RJC Inv., Inc., 2019 MT 101, 395 Mont. 389, 439 P.3d 1281, holding that a private right of action was not conferred by the Legislature relating to the Retail Installment Sales Act.

Liberal Construction:

Because the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 is in derogation of the common law, it should be liberally construed with a view to effect its object and to promote justice. The approach to defining what is meant by the word "services" should be broad in scope. The Act applies to a consumer loan by a bank. Baird v. Norwest Bank, 255 M 317, 843 P2d 327, 49 St. Rep. 1026 (1992).

The Codes establish the law of this state respecting the subjects to which they relate and their provisions and all proceedings under them are to be liberally construed with a view to effect their objects and to promote justice. Corwin v. Bieswanger, 126 M 337, 251 P2d 252 (1952).

A statute in derogation of the common law must be liberally, not strictly, construed. Anderson v. Wirkman, 67 M 176, 215 P 224 (1923). See also Wall v. Brookman, 72 M 228, 232 P 774 (1925); In re Connolly's Estate, 73 M 35, 235 P 408 (1925); O'Hanion v. Great N. Ry., 76 M 128, 245 P 518 (1926); Chmielewska v. Butte & Superior Min. Co., 81 M 36, 261 P 616 (1927); State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928); State ex rel. Bullard v. District Court, 86 M 358, 284 P 125 (1930); McMullen v. Shields, 96 M 191, 29 P2d 652 (1934).

Though a statute must be liberally construed, the court cannot go beyond its plain provisions. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1907).

Legislative Power to Alter Common Law: No one has a vested interest in any rule of common law. The Legislature may alter common-law causes of action to promote legitimate state interests and may alter or abrogate causes of action sounding in tort. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989).

Legislative Power to Change Common Law: The Legislature has the power to change the common law. St. v. Bush, 195 M 475, 636 P2d 849, 38 St. Rep. 2045 (1981).

"Marital Status" Condition of Employment — Antinepotism Policy Discriminatory: Plaintiffs were employed as administrators in the Harlem schools. Their wives were teachers in the Harlem schools. The school board adopted a policy that administrators could not have a spouse employed in any capacity in the Harlem school system. The board then terminated one plaintiff and reduced the other to a teaching position. Plaintiffs contended the action was discriminatory under 49-2-303 and 49-3-201. The Supreme Court held that "marital status", as used in the employment nondiscrimination statutes, should be broadly interpreted to accomplish the legislative objective of removing discriminatory practices in employment and therefore "marital status" includes the identity and occupation of one's spouse as well as whether one is married, single, widowed, or divorced. The board's policy was therefore discriminatory. Thompson v. School District, 192 M 266, 627 P2d 1229, 38 St. Rep. 706 (1981).

Obstruction of Drainage Ditch: Where owner had blocked drainage ditch so that water overflowed onto plaintiff's land, court found plaintiff had adequately shown negligence on the part of the owner and was not required to prove a case in trespass or trespass on the case. Rhodes v. Weigand, 145 M 542, 402 P2d 588 (1965).

Whole Act to Be Read Together: In construing a statute the whole act must be read together, and where there are several provisions or particulars such a construction is to be adopted as will give effect to all, if possible. Yurkovich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 132 M 77, 314 P2d 866 (1957).

Change of Venue: The Codes establish the law of this state respecting the subjects to which they relate, under this section, and it is for the Legislature to declare the general spirit and policy of the law, and, it having spoken on the subject of change of venue as provided in Title 25, ch. 2, part 1, its declaration is conclusive upon the courts. Shields v. Shields, 115 M 146, 139 P2d 528 (1943).

Construing a Statutory Departure From the Common Law Under This and Other Sections on Construction: Under this section, contention that Title 25, ch. 3, part 6 (providing for service of process on Secretary of State in action resulting from automobile accident), was in derogation of common law and must be strictly construed as unavailable to a nonresident plaintiff was untenable. The statutes must be liberally construed to effect their object. State ex rel. Gallagher v. District Court, 112 M 253, 114 P2d 1047 (1941).

Construction of Statutes Adopted From Sister States: Where Montana adopted a statute from a sister state prior to interpretation by the highest court of that state, the Supreme Court of this state is not bound by the interpretation of the foreign state if the reasoning does not appeal to it. State ex rel. Kommers v. District Court, 109 M 287, 96 P2d 271 (1939).

Formalities in Execution of Will: Under the rule laid down by this section, section 91-107, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), requiring certain formalities in execution of a will, must be liberally construed respecting the method by which the testator makes acknowledgment of his execution of the will. In re Bragg's Estate, 106 M 132, 76 P2d 57 (1938), explained in In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Operation and Effect:

This section is not inharmonious with 1-1-109. Conley v. Conley, 92 M 425, 15 P2d 922 (1932), explained in Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963).

The Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates. Lawrence v. Westlake, 28 M 503, 73 P 119 (1903). See also St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923), and Swords v. Occident Elevator Co., 72 M 189, 232 P 189 (1924).

The doctrine that a "statute in affirmance of the common law is to be construed as was the rule by that law" would perhaps be modified by this section. Nelson v. Great N. Ry., 28 M 297, 72 P 642 (1903).

Effect of Other Holdings:

The statutory requirements as to examining an adverse party before instituting an action are simple, direct, and plain, so that no recourse need be had to similar statutes of other states, and the decisions thereon in those states, in order to understand them. State ex rel. Holcomb v. District Court, 54 M 574, 172 P 329 (1918).

What the courts may have said touching other statutes or in an effort to construe provisions similarly clear is not convincing when construing a particular statute before it. State ex rel. Holcomb v. District Court, 54 M 574, 172 P 329 (1918).

Case Notes

Mailing of Multiple Tax Notices in Same Envelope Allowed: The County Clerk and Recorder mailed seven tax notices that a tax deed may be issued in the same envelope. Appellant contended that the language in 15-18-212(4), referring to mailing of a "notice", required that each tax notice be mailed separately. However, under this section, the singular includes the plural in statutory construction. Therefore, multiple notices of the issuance of a tax deed may be placed in the same envelope for mailing. Boyes v. Eddie, 1998 MT 311, 292 M 152, 970 P2d 91, 55 St. Rep. 1282 (1998).

Legislative Intent That Singular Not Include Plural: The 1974 amendment to 81-2-109 changed "supervising officer or officers" to "supervising officer", indicating a legislative intent to preclude only one employee of the Department from recovering his salary from the rule violator. (Effect of this section was not considered.) St. v. Sand Hills Beef, Inc., 196 M 77, 639 P2d 480, 38 St. Rep. 2140 (1981).

Masculine, Feminine, and Neuter Gender: Words used in the Codes in the masculine gender include the feminine. Our statute therefore declares that the phrase "Imputes to him impotence or want of chastity" would apply to the feminine as well as the masculine. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

Singular and Plural Numbers: The singular number when used in this Code may include the plural and the plural the singular. A statute requiring the notice of a school election to contain "the time and place of holding the election" may designate different "places". Hauswirth v. Mueller, 25 M 156, 64 P 324 (1901). See also Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 81 M 459, 264 P 127 (1928).

Attorney General's Opinions

Water Adjudication Program Not Void Given Sufficient Line Item Appropriations to Avoid Voidness: A contingent voidness clause attached to legislation establishing the water adjudication account required that at least $2 million each fiscal year be appropriated to the water adjudication account by line item appropriation. Although the line item appropriations were directed to two agencies instead of being included in a single programmatic line item, the Attorney General concluded that more than $2 million had been appropriated from state sources other than the water adjudication account to avoid the contingent voidness provision. 51 A.G. Op. 3 (2005).

Rural SIDs — Developer's RSID — Thickly Populated: Section 7-12-2102 allows the Board of County Commissioners to create RSIDs to fund improvements on underdeveloped and unoccupied parcels of land, provided the proposed district lies within an area which is "thickly populated". The Commissioners should exercise great care in assuring that the public interest requires creation of a "developer RSID" since the county taxpayers are exposed to potential financial liability should the developer's business judgment prove faulty. 38 A.G. Op. 23 (1979).

Case Notes

Federal Self-Employment Tax Not Considered Income Tax and Not Deductible in Calculating Montana Net Income — No Administrative Rule Required to Explain Denial of Tax Deduction When Deduction Not Explicitly Provided: The federal income tax and the federal self-employment tax are distinct entities, despite their colocation in the federal tax code and their conjoined collection procedures. The self-employment tax, although based on income, is in the nature of an employment tax and is a Social Security tax rather than an income tax as that term is commonly understood. Montana has the authority to interpret its own tax code without being bound by the vagaries of the federal tax code. Therefore, federal income tax, as used in 15-30-2131(1)(b), does not include federal self-employment taxes for purposes of calculating net income on Montana tax returns. Further, the Department of Revenue is not required to promulgate a rule explaining the denial of a tax deduction that is not explicitly provided for in the tax code. Baitis v. Dept. of Revenue, 2004 MT 17, 319 M 292, 83 P3d 1278 (2004).

Right of Defendant to Plead Guilty Over State's Objection — Erroneous Refusal to Accept Guilty Plea: Peplow was charged with and convicted of DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, driving without insurance, failing to report an accident, and tampering with evidence. Prior to trial, Peplow tried to enter guilty pleas to the driving with a suspended or revoked license and driving without insurance counts, but the trial court ruled that it was not required to accept the pleas because Peplow's actions giving rise to the counts were part of the res gestae and probative of the issue of impairment; the trial court proceeded to trial on all counts. Peplow appealed on grounds that the trial court erred in refusing the guilty pleas. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court considered a defendant's right to plead guilty over the state's objection. The court noted the numerous statutory procedural safeguards in place to ensure that: (1) a guilty plea is made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently; (2) there is a factual basis for the plea; (3) the court is not bound by any plea agreements; and (4) a defendant may not withdraw a guilty plea if the plea agreement is not accepted. The Supreme Court cited Lamb v. Missoula Imports, 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965 (1988), for the proposition that when the word "may" is used to confer power upon an officer, court, or tribunal and the public or a third person has an interest in the exercise of power, then the exercise of power becomes imperative. Under 46-16-105, a plea of guilty "may" be accepted before or during trial. The Supreme Court construed this language to mandate the acceptance of a guilty plea as long as the statutory requirements are met. Further, under 46-12-204, a defendant may plead guilty or not guilty without limitation on the right to plead. St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Definition of Farm for Purposes of Eminent Domain — Use of Otherwise Inapplicable Definition — Use of Ordinary Meaning of Undefined Term: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides. The District Court held that the definition of farm in 72-16-331(7) (section now repealed) applied to the use of that term in 70-30-102(6), reasoning that because the term "farm" was undefined in Title 70, ch. 30, the definition in 72-16-331(7) (section now repealed) should be applied because 1-2-107 provides that a definition contained in one section of law should be used for the purposes of other sections of law unless "a contrary intention plainly appears". The District Court then entered a preliminary condemnation order in favor of the Richters. The Supreme Court held that a contrary intention did in fact appear because the Legislature had, by use of the phrase "as used in 72-16-331 through 72-16-349" (all sections now repealed), limited the application of the terms defined in 72-16-331 (now repealed) to only 72-16-331 through 72-16-349 (all sections now repealed). Because farm was then left undefined for the purposes of Title 70, ch. 30, the Supreme Court applied the definition found in the American Heritage Dictionary and held that the Richters' property did not qualify as a farm, as defined in that dictionary, because the Richters had not prepared, fertilized, or tilled the soil on their property nor had they cited any authority for the Supreme Court to hold that naturally occurring timber on the property was a crop. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the condemnation order of the District Court. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998).

Restrictive Covenant Prohibiting Mobile Homes — Application to Manufactured Home — "Mobile Home" Used in Ordinary and Popular Sense: Wittmers purchased a 26- by 60-foot manufactured home that was capable of being put on wheels and moved it to a subdivision in Gallatin County. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain Wittmers from maintaining the home within the subdivision because it was in violation of a restrictive covenant that prohibited the use of "mobile homes". The Supreme Court held that the covenant was not ambiguous and that the term "mobile home", which was undefined in the covenants, should be understood in its ordinary and popular sense. The Supreme Court noted that other statutory definitions of the term "mobile home" could be looked to for guidance in determining the meaning of the term for the purposes of the covenants and that those other definitions include structures such as Wittmers'. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly construed the term "mobile home" to include the Wittmers' manufactured home because their home fell within other definitions of the term "mobile home", because the Supreme Court had previously construed the term to include homes such as the Wittmers' in two other cases before the court, and because the Wittmers' home had the characteristics of a mobile home. Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Public or Governmental Bodies — Committee to Recommend Commissioner of Political Practices Appointees to Governor: The committee that recommends a list of persons from whom the Governor may select the Commissioner of Political Practices is not a board, bureau, commission, or agency within the meaning of those terms as used in the open meeting law. However, the committee is a "public or governmental body" under the plain meaning of those terms as used in that law because it has a clear public and governmental purpose and was created for a specific governmental task and is thus subject to the open meeting law. Common Cause of Mont. v. Statutory Comm. to Nominate Candidates for Comm'r of Political Practices, 263 M 324, 868 P2d 604, 51 St. Rep. 77 (1994).

Judicial Notice of Facts Overruled: The lower court took judicial notice of the fact that livestock raised and intended for sale in the ordinary course of business constituted business inventory. The Supreme Court held that Montana law distinguishes livestock and business inventory so that the lower court had to construe livestock and business inventory according to their peculiar and appropriate meaning as technical words and phrases. Montana Stockgrowers Ass'n v. St., 238 M 113, 777 P2d 285, 46 St. Rep. 1132 (1989).

Legislative Intent — Plain Meaning: Plaintiff was not allowed to gather signatures for an initiative petition on a general election day in a school building used as a polling place. The school district had a general policy prohibiting solicitation of any kind in school buildings. Plaintiff contended the policy violated 13-35-218 by prohibiting solicitation permitted by that section. The Supreme Court held that its function in construing and applying statutes is to effect legislative intent. The primary tool for ascertaining intent is the plain meaning of the words used. The court properly refers to legislative history only when intent cannot be determined from the content of the statute. Section 13-35-218 did not necessitate such an inquiry. The court held that it clearly and unambiguously proscribes a manner of solicitation which results in interference with the election process or obstructing access to and from the polls but in no way guarantees access to persons whose solicitation effects no interference or obstruction. The most that can be said is that some manner of solicitation at polling places on election day may be permitted. Dorn v. Bd. of Trustees, 203 M 136, 661 P2d 426, 40 St. Rep. 348 (1983).

Administrative Rule Void When Contrary to Longstanding Administrative Interpretation: The Department of Revenue's longstanding administrative interpretation of the meaning of "on the same street" as used in 16-3-306 has the force and effect of law due to the repeated reenactment of that section by the Legislature without change in the operative language that no license be issued to a business "on the same street" and within 600 feet of a church or school. Thus, the interpretation could not be changed, and an administrative rule making a change is invalid. Hovey v. Dept. of Revenue, 203 M 27, 659 P2d 280, 40 St. Rep. 272 (1983).

Ordinary Rules of Grammar: Supreme Court is bound to follow common understanding and ordinary rules of grammar in interpreting statutes. Missoula High School Legal Defense Ass'n v. Supt. of Pub. Instruction, 196 M 106, 637 P2d 1188, 38 St. Rep. 2164 (1981).

Single Word Not to Be Used to Find Intent: A statute's intent cannot be derived from the definition of one word; a statute derives its meaning from the entire body of words taken together. Wyse v. District Court, 195 M 434, 636 P2d 865, 38 St. Rep. 2005 (1981).

Intention Shown by Plain Meaning — Other Means of Interpretation Barred: Where the intention of the Legislature can be determined from the plain meaning of words used in a statute, the courts may not go further and apply any other means of interpretation. Tongue River Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 195 M 511, 636 P2d 862, 38 St. Rep. 2032 (1981).

Standard of Review: In cases involving application of a well-defined statutory term to a given set of facts, the issue for the reviewing court is whether the lower court's application is legally correct. The reviewing court is not required to affirm simply because the lower court's application is not unreasonable. Therefore, in reviewing the Workers' Compensation Court's application of the definition of "temporary total disability" to its own findings of fact, the reviewing court determined whether the application was legally correct. Anderson v. Home Indem. Co., 178 M 290, 583 P2d 440 (1978).

Concerted Activities: After more than 40 years of construction by federal and state courts, "concerted activities" has acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in labor law which includes strikes. Dept. of Highways v. Pub. Employees Craft Council, 165 M 349, 529 P2d 785 (1974).

Force of Ordinary Rules of Grammar: Since under this section statutes must be interpreted according to the ordinary rules of grammar, and if when thus regarded, the words embody a definite meaning involving no absurdity or contradiction, the court may not add to or take from their meaning. In construing 70-27-205 the words "of the damages thus assessed, and of the rent found due" obviously constitute two separate and coordinate prepositional phrases connected by the word "and", the antecedent of both phrases being the noun "amount", and the amount which must be trebled in the judgment includes rent as well as damages, the court having no discretion in the matter. Steinbrenner v. Love, 113 M 466, 129 P2d 101 (1942).

"May" Construed:

The word "may", unless it has acquired a special meaning in law, is to be given its ordinary meaning. Lewis v. Petroleum Co., 92 M 563, 17 P2d 60 (1932), followed in Chouteau County v. Fort Benton, 181 M 123, 592 P2d 504 (1979), and Dover Ranch v. Yellowstone County, 187 M 276, 609 P2d 711 (1980).

Where the word "may" is used in conferring power upon an officer, court, or tribunal, and the public or a third person has an interest in the exercise of the power, the exercise of the power sometimes becomes imperative. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Lindsay, 25 M 24, 63 P 715 (1901), followed in State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918), State ex rel. Case v. Bolles, 74 M 54, 238 P 586 (1925), Durland v. Prickett, 98 M 399, 39 P2d 652 (1935), Colbert Drug Co. v. Elec. Products Consol., 106 M 11, 74 P2d 437 (1937), Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 M 343, 100 P2d 938 (1940), Hansen v. Havre, 112 M 207, 114 P2d 1053 (1941), and Bascom v. Carpenter, 126 M 129, 246 P2d 223 (1952). See also Lamb v. Missoula Imports, 230 M 183, 748 P2d 965 (1988), and St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001).

Words in Common Use:

"Facility" is not a technical word but one in common use, and its meaning is to be found in the sense attached to it by approved usage. Money raised by a tax to furnish "additional school facilities" may be used to pay the salaries of teachers. State ex rel. Knight v. Cave, 20 M 468, 52 P 200 (1898).

"Width". State ex rel. Keane v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 83 M 540, 273 P 290 (1929).

"Manufacture". St. v. Hennessy Co., 71 M 301, 230 P 64 (1924).

"Malt liquors". St. v. Centennial Brewing Co., 55 M 500, 179 P 296 (1919).

"Each party". Mullery v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 408, 148 P 323 (1915).

Attorney General's Opinions

"May" Construed: The use of the term "may" in 2-2-132 (now repealed) to convey authority to the Secretary of State to issue ethics opinions and adopt rules with regard thereto falls under the rule that whenever the rights of the public are involved in the exercise of the authority, the word "may" is interpreted to mean "shall". 39 A.G. Op. 32 (1981).

Tort Claims Against State — Fee Regulation: This section requires an attorney representing a party to a tort claim against the state to file a copy of his contract of employment with the Department of Administration. The District Court of Lewis and Clark County has the power to regulate such fees in conjunction with claims which are not litigated. In the case of litigated claims, the District Court before which the case is tried has regulatory power. The method and extent of its regulation are matters for the court's discretion. 37 A.G. Op. 121 (1978).

Elements of DWI: In order to sustain a conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol, the state must prove actual physical control of a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. This section does not require proof that a person is under the influence of alcohol to a degree which renders him incapable of safely driving a motor vehicle. 37 A.G. Op. 120 (1978).

Public Disclosure of Records: The Board of Real Estate when requested must disclose the status of any real estate licensee, whether any disciplinary action has been taken against that individual, and if so, the reason. Public access to information relating to complaints or to allegations and to other files on individual licensees is left to the discretion of the Board, within the guidelines of this opinion. All minutes except those minutes of a meeting closed by the presiding officer pursuant to 2-3-203 must be open to public inspection. 37 A.G. Op. 107 (1978).

"Immediate Family": The Subdivision and Platting Act refers to but does not define "immediate family". Because of the use of "immediate" and the usual common meaning of "family", the term's meaning was intended to be quite restrictive, and it means one's spouse and one's children by blood or adoption. 35 A.G. Op. 70 (1974).

"Volume of Business": A nontechnical term in a statute must be understood in its ordinary sense. If it has not acquired a peculiar meaning in the law, it must be taken in its ordinary sense with the meaning commonly given. "Volume of business", as used in 16-2-101 (prior to amendment in 1979) is the amount of money taken in the performance of the store's statutory functions. 29 A.G. Op. 18 (1961).

"District": The word "district", as it appears in the herd district law, is used in its ordinary sense and is not specially defined. Nothing in the herd district law indicates it is used in a special sense. 28 A.G. Op. 21 (1959).

1-2-107. Applicability of definitions.

Case Notes

Applying Pharmaceutical Definition of "Drug" in DUI Case — Counter to Legislative Intent: The defendant was charged with felony DUI and reckless driving after inhaling aerosol dust-remover that contained 1,1-Difluoroethane (DFE). The defendant argued that the charge should be dismissed because the definition of "drug" in 37-3-101 for pharmaceutical drugs did not include DFE. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, reasoning that it was illogical to apply the pharmaceutical definition of "drug" in a DUI statute under 1-2-107 because it would run counter to the legislative intent of protecting public safety. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the locations of the two uses of the term "drug" in the Montana Code Annotated demonstrated legislative intent that the pharmaceutical definition not apply to DUI statutes. St. v. Pinder, 2015 MT 157, 379 Mont. 357, 350 P.3d 377.

Suspension of Firefighters — All Cities Required to Present Charges to City Council for Hearing — Suspension Procedure Not Part of "Structure" of City Government Under Applicable Definitions — Statute Not Superseded by Charter: Elsenpeter, a Billings firefighter, was suspended from duty by the Billings fire chief. The firefighters' union filed a lawsuit in which the union contended that the suspension procedure used by the city was unlawful because the charges against Elsenpeter were not presented to the Billings City Council for hearing pursuant to 7-33-4124. The city contended that the suspension procedure that it used is part of the structure and organization of the city under its charter and that, pursuant to Art. XI, sec. 5, Mont. Const., and 7-3-701(2), which allow the structure of a chartered city government to supersede statutory requirements, the city may override the statutory requirements for hearing contained in 7-33-4124 because the definition of "structure" contained in 7-1-4121(24) is the definition that should apply. The Supreme Court held that in as much as the definitions in 7-1-4121 are, by the terms of that section, limited in their application to 7-1-4121 through 7-1-4149, the dictionary definition of "structure" is the definition that applies. Because the dictionary definition of structure was narrower, the Supreme Court held that the disciplinary suspension procedure used by the city was not part of the "structure" of city government. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the statutory procedure contained in 7-33-4124, requiring presentment of the charges to the City Council was not superseded by the city charter and had to be followed for the purposes of the suspension of Elsenpeter. Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Definition of Farm for Purposes of Eminent Domain — Use of Otherwise Inapplicable Definition — Use of Ordinary Meaning of Undefined Term: The Richters brought an action in District Court to condemn an easement across the land of a neighbor that surrounded their property on three sides. The District Court held that the definition of farm in 72-16-331(7) (section now repealed) applied to the use of that term in 70-30-102(6), reasoning that because the term "farm" was undefined in Title 70, ch. 30, the definition in 72-16-331(7) (section now repealed) should be applied because this section provides that a definition contained in one section of law should be used for the purposes of other sections of law unless "a contrary intention plainly appears". The District Court then entered a preliminary condemnation order in favor of the Richters. The Supreme Court held that a contrary intention did in fact appear because the Legislature had, by use of the phrase "as used in 72-16-331 through 72-16-349" (all sections now repealed), limited the application of the terms defined in 72-16-331 (now repealed) to only 72-16-331 through 72-16-349 (all sections now repealed). Because farm was then left undefined for the purposes of Title 70, ch. 30, the Supreme Court applied the definition found in the American Heritage Dictionary and held that the Richters' property did not qualify as a farm, as defined in that dictionary, because the Richters had not prepared, fertilized, or tilled the soil on their property nor had they cited any authority for the Supreme Court to hold that naturally occurring timber on the property was a crop. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the condemnation order of the District Court. Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 M 379, 962 P2d 583, 55 St. Rep. 663 (1998), followed in Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Lack of Compensable Injury Precludes Exclusivity of Workers' Compensation Remedy — Definition of Injury — Tort Action Allowed: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Citing case law from other states and the public policy expressed by the Legislature, the Supreme Court held that the refusal of the Legislature to provide coverage under the workers' compensation laws precluded the applicability of the exclusive remedy theory upon which those laws are based. The Supreme Court also held that because the definition of injury contained in 39-71-411 must be construed consistently with the definition of injury in 39-71-119, an injury excluded by the definition in 39-71-119 must also be excluded from the exclusive remedy provisions of 39-71-411. Because Stratemeyer did not suffer an injury covered by the exclusive remedy provision of the workers' compensation laws, he was free to bring a separate tort action against the county. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep. 245 (1996), followed in Kleinhesselink v. Chevron, U.S.A., 277 M 158, 920 P2d 108, 53 St. Rep. 668 (1996), and Buerkley v. Aspen Meadows Ltd. Partnership, 1999 MT 97, 294 M 263, 980 P2d 1046, 56 St. Rep. 415 (1999). Stratemeyer and Kleinhesselink were distinguished in Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Malice as Applied to Intentional Injury: The definition of actual malice in 27-1-221, adopted in 1987 for purposes of punitive damages, did not change the standard used to determine whether an injury was intentional for purposes of the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act. The definition of malice in 1-1-204 is still applicable to workers' compensation cases. Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993).

Definitions Improperly Applied to Only Part of MCA: The State Tax Appeal Board improperly interpreted language in a definition section reading "As used in parts 1 through 4 of this chapter, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the following definitions apply" to mean that the definitions related only to the parts listed. That language only indicated that the Legislature intended the particular application of the definitions in those parts of the MCA without limitation to the general use of the definitions in other parts of the code pursuant to this section. Dept. of Revenue v. Gallatin Outpatient Clinic, Inc., 234 M 425, 763 P2d 1128, 45 St. Rep. 2025 (1988).

Tax Sale Provisions Applicable to Improvements on Tax-Exempt Land — Meaning of "Real Property" and "Real Estate": Montana's tax collection laws governing real estate tax sales apply to improvements located on tax-exempt lands. The conveyance by tax deed of appellant's log cabin for nonpayment of taxes was upheld against his assertion that the cabin, situated on Forest Service land, is not an improvement fixed to land for purposes of the Realty Transfer Act and not "real estate" for purposes of the tax sale provisions. The court traced the Legislature's circuitous route to a definition of taxable real property in support of its holding. Brown v. Hart, 213 M 517, 692 P2d 14, 41 St. Rep. 2264 (1984).

Definition of "Plat" — Applicability: The definition of "plat" found in 76-3-103 of the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act is clearly applicable to Title 76, ch. 4, part 1, on sanitation in subdivisions. The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences' (now Department of Environmental Quality) contention that it has broad authority in defining the term plat by virtue of the lack of a statutory definition under the sanitation in subdivisions law is without merit. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lasorte, 182 M 267, 596 P2d 477 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Water Adjudication Program Not Void Given Sufficient Line Item Appropriations to Avoid Voidness: A contingent voidness clause attached to legislation establishing the water adjudication account required that at least $2 million each fiscal year be appropriated to the water adjudication account by line item appropriation. Although the line item appropriations were directed to two agencies instead of being included in a single programmatic line item, the Attorney General concluded that more than $2 million had been appropriated from state sources other than the water adjudication account to avoid the contingent voidness provision. 51 A.G. Op. 3 (2005).

Meaning of "Misdemeanor": The word "misdemeanor", as used in 44-5-301, should be assigned the meaning given the word in 45-2-101. 40 A.G. Op. 35 (1984).

"Motor Vehicle" — Aircraft: The motor vehicle laws' definition of "motor vehicle", which obviously excludes aircraft, must be used for the definition of "motor vehicle" in tax statute relating to motor vehicle assessment. 30 A.G. Op. 20 (1963).

"Motor Vehicle" — Trailer Houses: When motor vehicle laws defined "motor vehicle" to include trailer houses, that definition must be used elsewhere in the code absent a contrary intent. As used in tax assessment provision, "motor vehicle" includes trailer houses not affixed to land. 29 A.G. Op. 30 (1961).

Compiler's Comments

1983 Amendment: Near beginning of (2), changed "presumed" to "implied"; and inserted (3) relating to retroactive application to the MCA of the presumption in subsection (2).

Case Notes

No Retroactive Application to Open Meeting Law: In 1975 the official misconduct criminal statute (45-7-401) was expanded to include a violation of the open meeting law (2-3-203). In 1977 a broad definition of "meeting" was enacted (2-3-202). In 1979 this section was amended, creating the presumption that a reference to a section encompasses subsequent changes. However, because 1-2-109 states that no law is retroactive unless expressly declared to be, this section does not act to incorporate the 1977 definition of "meeting" into the 1975 criminal statute. St. v. Conrad, 197 M 406, 643 P2d 239, 39 St. Rep. 680 (1982).

Corporate License Tax — Limitations on Assessment Where No Return — No Revival of Impliedly Repealed Section by Internal Reference: The 2-year Statute of Limitations in 27-2-211 applied to the assessment of corporate license tax for corporations that failed to file a return for the reason that the Supreme Court in St. v. King Colony Ranch, 137 M 145, 350 P2d 841 (1960), had held that sec. 1, Ch. 209, L. 1945 (amending 15-31-526), had superseded sec. 9, Ch. 166, L. 1933 (enacting 15-31-542, repealed by Ch. 79, L. 1983), as to the time limitation and the Legislature, in sec. 2, Ch. 186, L. 1963 (enacting 15-31-509), though referencing 15-31-542 (repealed by Ch. 79, L. 1983) in an exception, had not used language to revive it; therefore 15-31-542 (repealed by Ch. 79, L. 1983) remained superseded or repealed. (But see 15-31-544.) Caterpillar Tractor Co., Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 194 M 537, 633 P2d 618, 38 St. Rep. 1245 (1981).

GENERAL

Ex Post Facto Application of Longer Statute of Limitations — Violation of Constitution — Charges Dismissed With Prejudice: Nearly three decades after a child's rape, the defendant's DNA identified him as the perpetrator and he was charged. At the time of the crime, the statute of limitations for rape was 5 years. Later, it was extended to 1 year after a suspect is conclusively identified by DNA testing. The defendant filed a motion to dismiss because the statute of limitations in effect at the time of the crime had expired. The District Court denied the motion and reasoned that the statute extending the timeframe applied retroactively and did not violate ex post facto laws of the Montana Constitution or the U.S. Constitution. The defendant filed a writ of supervisory control, which the Supreme Court granted. The court held that even though the Legislature had intended the new statute of limitations to apply retroactively, its application violated the ex post facto clause. Accordingly, the court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court to grant the defendant's motion to dismiss the charges with prejudice. Tipton v. 13th Judicial District Court, 2018 MT 164, 392 Mont. 59, 421 P.3d 780.

Law in Effect at Time of Offense Controls: A District Court's imposition of costs in the amount of $800 to cover the defendant's cost of a public defender was reversed and remanded to District Court on the grounds that 46-8-113 allowed only up to $500 for costs of counsel in a felony case at the time of the offense. St. v. Dietsch, 2013 MT 245, 371 Mont. 460, 308 P.3d 111.

Unsubstantiated Reports From Another Jurisdiction — Prohibition on Use Not Retroactive: In an abuse and neglect proceeding in 2001, the court ordered the physician doing psychological evaluations of the parents to consider historical documents, including the father's unsubstantiated child neglect history from California from in 1997 and a 1990 conviction for exhibiting a firearm. On appeal of the termination of parental rights, the mother asserted that the use of the information violated the spirit of the Montana statute requiring unsubstantiated reports to be destroyed after 3 years. The requirement to destroy unsubstantiated records was enacted in 2003 and was not retroactive. Without legislative intent, statutes do not apply retroactively, so the 2003 statute did not apply to the District Court's 2001 decision. The court did not err in requiring the physician to consider unsubstantiated allegations from California. In re D.B., 2004 MT 371, 325 M 13, 103 P3d 1026 (2004).

Retroactivity of New Judicial Rules and Judicial Interpretation — Section 46-23-1012 (1999) Applied Retroactively to Parole Revocations Between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001: On April 26, 2001, the Supreme Court held that a probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. On May 4, 2001, Goebel petitioned the court to look beyond the plain language of 46-23-1012 and hold that the probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender has been arrested by a probation officer rather than pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Effective May 1, 2001, the Legislature amended 46-23-1012 to delete the requirement for a probable cause hearing. On May 9, 2001, Giddings filed a petition for rehearing, asking the court to direct the District Court to dismiss the petition to revoke Giddings' suspended sentence on grounds that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to revoke the suspended sentence because of the amendment to 46-23-1012, contending that application of the new statute would violate the constitutional ban on ex post facto legislation. The Supreme Court declined to modify the decision in either Goebel or Giddings because no material fact or question decisive of the cases themselves was overlooked and the decisions did not conflict with any express statute or controlling decision. However, the court did discuss the retroactive application of judicial rules of criminal procedure and the judicial interpretation of a statute, as well as the claim that the retroactive application of 46-23-1012 was a violation of the ex post facto clause. Citing Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 US 298 (1994), the court held that a court's interpretation of a statute is never new law because the decision declares what the statute meant from the day of its enactment, not from the date of the decision. In determining whether a statute violates the ex post facto clause, the court referred to the test in St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453 (2000), which provided that to be in violation of the clause, a statute must be retrospective and must disadvantage the offender affected by it. In this case, Giddings was not disadvantaged because the statutory change did not alter the definition of or punishment for the probation violation that Giddings was charged with. Further, the error that was the basis for reversal of Giddings' case was jurisdictional, so all proceedings in the District Court were void ab initio, and the state was entitled to proceed anew, following the procedure outlined in the newly amended version of 46-23-1012. The Supreme Court's decisions based on the 1999 version of 46-23-1012 were applicable retroactively to persons whose probation or parole was revoked between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001. Thus, if a person was arrested during that period pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge and was not afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did not have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing, so the state could refile the petition to revoke the person's probation pursuant to the 2001 version of 46-23-1012, as long as the probationer was still under the custody or supervision of the Department of Corrections on May 1, 2001. If the person was afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 155, 306 M 83, 31 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Finley, 2003 MT 239, 317 M 268, 77 P3d 193 (2003), and St. v. Van Haele, 2005 MT 153, 327 M 400, 114 P3d 225 (2005).

General Rule That Appellate Court Must Apply Law in Effect at Time of Decision: A statute is not retroactive, in the sense that the word is used in this section, merely because it is applied to conduct that occurred before the statute's effective date. A statute is retroactive for purposes of this section only if it takes away or impairs a right acquired before or imposes a new obligation, duty, or disability with respect to conduct that occurred before the statute's effective date or gives conduct a legal effect different from that which the conduct had when the conduct occurred. The general rule that an appellate court must apply the law in effect at the time of the court's decision (a rule originally applied only to the law in judicial decisions, but later mistakenly applied to statutes and administrative rules) is limited to the law in judicial decisions. To the extent that prior cases of this court are inconsistent with this holding, they are overruled. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996), followed in C. Loney Concrete Constr., Inc. v. Employment Relations Div., 1998 MT 230, 291 M 41, 964 P2d 777, 55 St. Rep. 961 (1998). (Annotator's note: See case notes under this section stating that retroactive application of a statute with regard to procedural matters, as against substantive rights, duties, and effects, is permissible.)

Interest on Delinquent Tax Payments — Effect of Conflicting Attorney General's Opinions: After the Legislature passed an amendment raising the rate of interest applied to tax payments in delinquency, the Attorney General issued two opinions as to whether the increase should be given retroactive application, the first opinion saying "no" and the second opinion, issued 2 months later, saying "yes". Appellant claimed that the effect of the Attorney General's opinions was to divide delinquent taxpayers into two groups, those to whom the increase was not retroactively applied, under the first opinion, and those to whom the increase was applied, under the second opinion, and that therefore, retroactive application of the increase violated the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Montana Constitution as well as the 14th amendment of the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's dismissal of appellant's claim, ruling that the constitutionality of a law is determined by looking at the enactment itself rather than at an administrative interpretation of it. Further, the law is not discriminatory and a delinquent taxpayer does not have a vested right to application of a particular rate of interest. O'Shaughnessey v. Wolfe, 212 M 12, 685 P2d 361, 41 St. Rep. 1557 (1984).

Presumption Against Retroactive Application: This section creates a presumption against construing a statute to apply retroactively without an expressed legislative intent to do so in the statute itself. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Retroactivity Clearly Intended Although No Express Statement: If it is unmistakable that an act was intended to operate retroactively, that intention is controlling as to the interpretation of the statute, even though it is not expressly so stated. Davidson v. Love, 127 M 366, 264 P2d 705 (1953), followed in Neel v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984), and O'Shaughnessey v. Wolfe, 212 M 12, 685 P2d 361, 41 St. Rep. 1557 (1984).

Section a Rule of Construction: This section is a rule of construction and, in the absence of express language giving a statute retroactive effect, it will not be so construed. State ex rel. Whitlock v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 100 M 72, 45 P2d 684 (1935).

Intent of Legislature — From What Determinable: Where it becomes necessary to determine whether the Legislature in enacting a statute "expressly declared" it retroactive within the meaning of this section, providing that no law is retroactive unless expressly so declared, its intent in that behalf must be gathered from the act itself and from no other source. Mills v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 97 M 13, 33 P2d 563 (1934).

Curative Statutes: Curative statutes designed to legalize past acts generally can have no prospective operation. Snidow v. Mont. Home for the Aged, 88 M 337, 292 P 722 (1930).

Presumptions: There is always a presumption that statutes are intended to operate prospectively only, and words ought not to have a retroactive operation unless they are so clear, strong, and imperative that no other meaning can be annexed to them or unless the intention of the Legislature cannot be otherwise satisfied. Every reasonable doubt is resolved against a retroactive operation of a statute. State ex rel. Mills v. Dixon, 68 M 526, 219 P 637 (1923). See also State ex rel. Billings v. Osten, 91 M 76, 5 P2d 562 (1931).

Statutes Deemed Retroactive — Elements: A statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions already past is deemed retroactive. Butte & Superior Min. Co. v. McIntyre, 71 M 254, 229 P 730 (1924).

Definitions: The terms "retroactive" and "retrospective" as applied to law are used interchangeably and are synonymous. Cont. Oil Co. v. Mont. Concrete Co., 63 M 223, 207 P 116 (1922).

PROCEDURAL CIVIL LAWS

Presumption of Nonabandonment — 2005 Legislature's Amendments Procedural, Not Retroactive: In a water adjudication action, the community of Rimini argued that the city of Helena had abandoned a portion of its water claim to Ten Mile Creek. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the 2005 Legislature's amendments to 85-2-227, creating a presumption of nonabandonment for municipal use water rights, did not amount to a retroactive application of law because the effect of the 2005 amendments was procedural and not substantive. The Supreme Court additionally found that actions taken by Helena established a presumption of municipal nonabandonment, that the Water Court erred in determining that the city had abandoned a portion of its right, and that the city of Helena would have to notify the Attorney General under Rule 5.1, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), if it were to challenge the constitutionality of 85-2-234. In re Helena v. Community of Rimini, 2017 MT 145, 388 Mont. 1, 397 P.3d 1.

Notice of Necessity for Driver to Complete Driver Rehabilitation and Improvement Course Not Required Following Repeal of Notice Requirement — Substantive Right Not Affected: Keeney accumulated 30 conviction points in a 3-year period and was notified by the Department of Justice that his driver's license was revoked for 3 years. Keeney had accumulated 18 conviction points on speeding violations by May 2, 2003, the last points being acquired from a speeding violation in Idaho. Prior to its May 5, 2003, repeal, 61-11-204(3)(b) required that a driver who accumulated 18 or more conviction points be notified of the necessity to complete a driver rehabilitation and improvement course. Keeney asserted that his due process rights were violated when the Department failed to notify him of his status as a habitual offender under the former notice requirement, essentially challenging the perceived retroactive application of the repealed provision. However, the Department was not notified of the Idaho violation until May 28, 2003. Therefore, the Department properly applied the law as it stood on May 5, 2003. The Department did not change the method of calculating points for speeding infractions prior to the repeal and did not punish Keeney for violations that occurred before the repeal, but rather properly considered the previous violations as points against Keeney's record when he finally accumulated 30 points. Once Keeney reached the 30-point plateau within a 3-year period, he was correctly sent a notice of revocation and afforded the option for judicial review of the revocation. Procedural due process required nothing more because it was not necessary to advise Keeney of his continuing duty to act as a law-abiding citizen. In re Driver's License of Keeney v. Dept. of Justice, 2006 MT 152, 332 M 446, 139 P3d 814 (2006).

Plaintiff's Ability to Maintain Action Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation. Another defendant, Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that as a defunct corporation, Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. However, Robinson's status as a defunct corporation did not mandate a change of venue. The corporate survival statutes, 35-1-935 and 35-1-937 (both now repealed), maintained the status quo concerning corporate rights and responsibilities before and after dissolution, including actions against defunct corporations. Atlantic's argument that application of this interpretation to Robinson would require impermissible retroactive application of the corporate survival statutes failed because Robinson acquired no vested right to be free from liability before the running of the statute of repose in former 35-1-930 (repealed 1991). Denial of Atlantic's motion to change venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005), following Williams v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 174 M 387, 571 P2d 90 (1977).

Use of New Licensing Procedures Not Retroactive Application of Law and Not Violation of Department's Internal Policy: The Wallaces argued that the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks had violated the law by retroactively applying license approval criteria for game farm (now alternative livestock ranch) approval to them when they had filed their license application prior to 1993 legislative changes to the licensing law. The Wallaces also argued that the Department had not followed its own internal policies that required it to act on the application within 60 days of receipt. The Supreme Court held that the Department had correctly applied the new licensing criteria because a license is a privilege, not a vested right, the Department is required to comply with the law circumscribing its powers, and as a general rule, an agency is required to make its decisions on the law as it exists at the time that the decision is made, despite the fact that the law may have changed. The Supreme Court also held that the 60-day requirement to approve or disapprove a license application had been a statutory requirement under the previous law and had ceased to be a requirement when the amendments to the law became effective. Wallace v.

Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, 269 M 364, 889 P2d 817, 52 St. Rep. 30 (1995). See also Harlem v. St. Highway Comm'n, 149 M 281, 425 P2d 718 (1967), and Saint Vincent Hosp. v. Blue Cross, 261 M 56, 862 P2d 6 (1993).

Retroactivity and Validity of Change in Burden of Proof for Change of Water Appropriation: The fact that a water right existing at the time of adoption of the 1972 Montana Constitution is recognized by that constitution does not mean that if the owner of the right applies for a change in the right, the burden of proof must be placed on the objector. The objector had the burden in 1972, but the holder now has the burden under 85-2-402. The change in the burden of proof is not an impermissible retroactive application of the statute to the detriment of vested rights acquired under the 1972 Montana Constitution. Statutes that modify the procedure for exercising a vested right or for carrying out a duty do not constitute retroactive legislation. In re Application for Change of Appropriation of Water Rights for Royston, 249 M 425, 816 P2d 1054, 48 St. Rep. 747 (1991). See also In re Helena v. Community of Rimini, 2017 MT 145, 388 Mont. 1, 397 P.3d 1.

Retroactive Applicability — Commission as Exclusive Remedy for Discrimination in Employment: The 1987 amendment of 49-2-509 (now repealed) demonstrated a clear legislative intent to overrule Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335 (1987), and to allow the Commission for Human Rights to provide the exclusive remedy for discrimination in employment, including claims of sexual harassment. As set out in the applicability provisions of the 1987 law, the exclusive remedy provision applies to all cases pending on or filed after April 16, 1987, and may therefore be applied retroactively. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990).

Inapplicability of Retroactivity Exclusion to Nonsubstantive Procedural Laws: New legislation that affects only procedural matters and that does not relate to substantive rights of the parties does not fall within the ambit of this section. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Sky Country, Inc., 239 M 376, 780 P2d 1135, 46 St. Rep. 1760 (1989), followed in EBI/Orion Group v. Blythe, 281 M 50, 931 P2d 38, 54 St. Rep. 54 (1997), which was followed in Murphy v. WestRock Co., 2018 MT 54, 390 Mont. 394, 414 P.3d 276.

Retroactivity of Change in Time for Hearing: Subsection (2) of 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) was amended in 1985 to require adjudicatory hearing within 20 days of filing of petition and amended in 1987 to remove the 20-day requirement. Hearing in this case was held after effective date of 1985 amendment but not within 20 days of filing the petition. The petition was filed before the 1985 amendment became effective. Appellant contended 1985 amendment was procedural and applied retroactively to require hearing within 20 days. The Supreme Court, citing Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), held that even though this provision may be procedural and therefore not subject to this section (which states no law is retroactive unless expressly so declared), the 1987 amendment was likewise retroactive and therefore voided the 20-day requirement. Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Child's Death Occurring Prior to Amendment of 27-1-512 Providing That Wrongful Death Action May Be Brought by Either Parent — Second Action by Father Permissible — Lack of Standing by Defendant to Challenge Constitutionality of Statute: Prior to its amendment in 1975, section 93-2809, R.C.M. 1947 (now recodified as 27-1-512), provided that an action for wrongful death of a child was to be brought by the child's father, unless the father was dead or had deserted the family. In those instances, the mother could bring the lawsuit. The statute was amended to provide that either parent may bring such an action. Barrett's daughter was killed in an automobile accident 2 weeks before the statute was amended. Barrett and his wife were divorced in 1969, prior to the child's death. The mother was the child's legal custodian. Ten weeks after the amendment went into effect, the mother filed a wrongful death action. The mother settled the case and as personal representative of the child's estate executed a release of all claims arising from the accident. Barrett had not been made a party to the lawsuit or notified of the proceedings, nor did he share in the proceeds of the settlement; however, he was aware of the lawsuit prior to its settlement. In 1978, Barrett filed a wrongful death action on his own behalf. The District Court, over appellant's objection, conducted a jury trial at which Barrett prevailed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The court agreed with appellant's contention that normally there can be only one wrongful death action arising from a death. But the court ruled that, in this case, the father's suit was permissible because an action for wrongful death accrues in the statutory designee at the time of death and the amendment had not been made retroactive. The court further held that appellant lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of the original statute because appellant was not injured by the alleged under-inclusiveness of the statute. Barrett v. Soyland, 221 M 160, 717 P2d 1090, 43 St. Rep. 712 (1986).

Change in Procedure Not Retroactive Legislation: Application of a statute that modifies a procedure for exercising a vested right or for carrying out a duty does not constitute retroactive legislation. A 1959 amendment which only changed the procedure the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) must follow in disposing of property and does not impair the Department's rights or impose additional duties does not constitute retroactive legislation. Castles v. State ex rel. Mont. Dept. of Highways, 187 M 356, 609 P2d 1223 (1980).

No Retroactive Application of Uniform Custody Law in Pending Action: Absent a clear expression of legislative purpose, retroactive application of even a procedural statute so as to affect prior proceedings of a pending action cannot be justified. Therefore, jurisdictional rulings entered before the effective date of the UCCJA (Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act) are not subject to the UCCJA. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Applicability of Amendment: The 1973 amendment to 39-71-601 applies to all claims existing at its effective date without retroactive effect. Since claimant's action had not been barred by the amendment's effective date, the division had the power to consider his petition for an extension of time. Williams v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 174 M 387, 571 P2d 90 (1977).

Retroactivity of Rules of Procedure: Although legislative intent to give retroactive force to a statute must appear and all doubt will be resolved against retroactive application, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply retroactively. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966); Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 34 F.R.D. 515 (D.C. Mont. 1964); Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 177 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

SUBSTANTIVE CIVIL LAWS

Notification Requirement of Underground Tank Release Not Retroactive —Compensation Properly Denied: Plaintiff discovered a possible leak in an underground tank in 2002. Even though the 2001 version of 75-11-308 and related administrative rules required notice to the Department of Environmental Quality within 24 hours of the occurrence of unusual operating conditions, plaintiff waited until after the 2003 amendment of 75-11-308, which eliminated the 24-hour notice provision, to report the possible leak. Plaintiff then sought reimbursement for the cleanup. The Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board denied the request because plaintiff did not report the unusual operating conditions within 24 hours pursuant to the 2001 law in effect at the time that plaintiff noticed the possible spill. Plaintiff appealed denial of the compensation claim, but the District Court affirmed the Board's decision, so plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed. Plaintiff asserted that the 2003 amendments to 75-11-308 were to be applied retroactively. However, the retroactive applicability section in the 2003 bill did not include a reference to 75-11-308, so amendments to that section were not retroactive, and the savings clause provided that the amendments to 75-11-308 did not affect duties that matured prior to the 2003 amendments. Thus, the 2001 version applied, and plaintiff's failure to report the spill within 24 hours rendered plaintiff ineligible for compensation. Town Pump, Inc. v. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd., 2008 MT 15, 341 M 139, 176 P3d 1017 (2008).

Parole Evidence Held Inadmissible to Prove Representative Capacity of Maker of Note — Definition of Debtor — Unambiguous Terms Notwithstanding Security Agreement — Statute Not Retroactive — Former Statute Inapplicable: By use of a note and security agreement, Carelli sold 38 elk to Hall who, as Stireses' partner, operated the Game Ranch. Later, Carelli brought an action against Stireses alleging that Stireses were also liable on the debt because Hall had orally told Carelli at the time of the sale that the elk were being purchased for the Game Ranch. The Supreme Court held that Hall's oral statements to Carelli were inadmissible on the issue of Stireses' liability on the note for three reasons: (1) The note was clear and unambiguous in that Hall's representative capacity did not appear on the note, Hall was the "debtor" as defined in the security agreement, and a reference to the Game Ranch in the security agreement did not make the note ambiguous so as to require explanation by parole evidence. (2) The Supreme Court held that a 1991 amendment to 30-3-403 regarding the capacity in which a person signs an instrument, if applied in this case, would cause a difference in the liability of the parties. Therefore, the amendment is substantive. Because there was no expression of legislative intent that the 1991 version be applied retroactively, the 1985 version of 30-3-403 and not the 1991 version applies, and parole evidence is not relevant to that 1985 version. (3) The facts of the case did not fall within the terms of the 1985 version of 30-3-403. Carelli v. Hall, 279 M 202, 926 P2d 756, 53 St. Rep. 1116 (1996).

Fall From Ladder After Scaffolding Law Amended to Delete Ladders From Definition of Scaffold: In 1992, the employee fell off a ladder while preparing to paint a wall. He died later the same day. The 1995 amendment of 50-77-101, which excluded ladders from the definition of a scaffold, would, if retroactively applied to this case, result in a different legal effect than the prior law. This is forbidden by this section, which provides that a statute is not retroactive unless expressly so declared. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

Error to Apply Willing Provider Amendment Retroactively: The 1991 willing provider amendment added to 33-22-1704 was a substantive rather than procedural change in insurance law and, as such, absent specific legislative intent under this section, did not apply retroactively. Saint Vincent Hosp. & Health Center v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 261 M 56, 862 P2d 6, 50 St. Rep. 1190 (1993). See also Harlem v. St. Highway Comm'n, 149 M 281, 425 P2d 718 (1967), and Wallace v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, 269 M 364, 889 P2d 817, 52 St. Rep. 30 (1995).

Change in Method of Determining Attorney Fees — No Retroactivity: A statute should not be retroactively applied unless the Legislature clearly expressed an intention to so apply it. There was no indication the Legislature intended 39-71-614, changing the method of determining attorney fees in workers' compensation cases, to apply retroactively, and the court would not make the section retroactive. The section, effective April 19, 1985, does not apply to cases in which the injury occurred prior to that date. The law in effect on the date of the injury applies in determining the attorney fees. Cadwell v. Bechtel Power Corp., 225 M 423, 732 P2d 1352, 44 St. Rep. 370 (1987).

No Retroactive Application of Amendments Relating to Lump-Sum Conversion of Biweekly Workers' Compensation Benefits and Discount to Present Value — Prospective Application Not Violative of Equal Protection: The lump-sum conversion of biweekly workers' compensation benefits and discounting to present value provisions added to 39-71-741 by 1985 amendment may not be constitutionally applied retroactively to injuries that occurred prior to April 15, 1985, the effective date of the amendment. Prospective application of the amendment relating to lump-sum conversions is not violative of the constitutional equal protection guaranties because the amendment merely codified in detailed form prior case law allowing a conversion and represented no significant change from the law as it existed prior to April 15, 1985. Buckman v. Mont. Deaconess Hosp., 224 M 318, 730 P2d 380, 43 St. Rep. 2216 (1986), followed in Komeotis v. Williamson Fencing, 225 M 356, 736 P2d 93, 44 St. Rep. 298 (1987).

Liability for Alcohol-Related Injuries — Statute Not Retroactively Applied: After consuming alcohol at a bar for 3 hours, a truck driver died from injuries received in an accident. His widow sued the bar, claiming that its action in allowing the driver to drink and then drive was the proximate cause of his death. The District Court granted the bar's motion for a judgment on the pleadings for failure to state a claim for relief, ruling that Montana did not recognize common-law dram shop liability against the bar owner. Upon appeal, the Supreme Court held that the 1986 law (27-1-710) defining civil liability for injuries involving alcohol consumption cannot be applied retroactively. The court also ruled that the District Court erred in granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings as the widow's complaint alleging negligence by the bar properly stated a claim for relief. Jevning v. Skyline Bar, 223 M 422, 726 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1845 (1986).

Substantive Amendment to Law Regarding Uninsured Employer — Not Retroactive: Appellant contended that the 1985 amendment to 39-71-508 and enactment of 39-71-515 were designed to remedy deficiencies in the prior law so that an uninsured employer would not be able to completely escape liability. He argued that since the 1985 legislation was essentially procedural or remedial, it should apply retroactively under 1-2-109, even though the legislation occurred subsequent to his accident. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the statutes imposed a new liability or obligation upon employers and granted employees a new cause of action or right that did not exist prior to enactment. This result fit exactly within the definition of a substantive law, and the court declined to apply the statutes retroactively. Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986).

No Retroactive Application of Workers' Compensation Social Security Disability Offset Statute: At the time that claimant suffered the injury which rendered him totally permanently disabled, in May 1974, Montana law provided for a 100% offset of social security disability benefits. Shortly afterward, the Legislature reduced the offset to 50%. In 1980, in McClanathan v. Smith, 186 M 56, 606 P2d 507, the Supreme Court ruled that the 100% offset statute was constitutionally unenforceable. Therefore, application of a 50% offset to claimant was error. The statutes in effect at the time of injury set the standards by which the benefits for the claimant are computed, and since the offset statute in effect at the time of claimant's injury was void under the McClanathan decision, no offset can be made of claimant's benefits. Neither can the 50% offset statute be applied retroactively to claimant because this would be an impairment of his vested rights. Trusty v. Consol. Freightways, 210 M 148, 681 P2d 1085, 41 St. Rep. 973 (1984).

Increased Homestead Exemption Held Retroactive: Where the plaintiff filed a homestead declaration after a deficiency judgment had been obtained against her and then brought a declaratory judgment action to determine the retroactive application of an amendment to the homestead exemption statutes allowing the filing of a declaration after judgment, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in ruling that the amendment did not apply retroactively to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court held that the amendment would have a retroactive effect under the rationale of Harlem v. St. Highway Comm'n, 149 M 281, 425 P2d 718 (1967), because it impaired a right (the right of execution acquired under existing law). While there was no express declaration that the amendment apply retroactively to judgments obtained prior to the effective date of the amendment (October 1, 1981), the Supreme Court was guided by the maxim of law requiring a liberal application of the homestead exemption in favor of the homestead claimant and held that the amendment was intended to apply retroactively. Neel v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).

Retroactive Calculation of Tax — Unconstitutional: Plaintiffs contended that 15-31-114(2)(b)(ii)(C) was unconstitutionally retroactive. Plaintiff, Havre Federal Savings and Loan Association, had incurred a net operating loss in each of the 5 years from 1974 through 1978. The challenged portion of the statute was enacted in 1979. Under 15-31-114(2)(b)(i), plaintiff carried forward its net operating losses and applied them to its 1979 return, which resulted in no net income for that year. The defendant, acting under the authority of the challenged subsection, recalculated plaintiff's net income for the years 1974 through 1978, which resulted in no net operating losses to carry forward. The Supreme Court held that the subsection was retroactive in effect and therefore unconstitutional. The State cannot change a law in 1979 and compel a recalculation of tax returns filed for 1974 through 1978 based on the new law effective for the first time in 1979. First Fed. S & L Ass'n v. Dept. of Revenue, 200 M 358, 654 P2d 496, 39 St. Rep. 1802 (1982).

Erroneous Application: The court erred by applying 72-16-313 (now repealed), as amended in 1973, and granting a refund of inheritance tax when it accrued prior to amendment with the death of the decedent amounting to a retrospective application in contravention of 1-2-109. Burr v. Dept. of Revenue, 175 M 473, 575 P2d 45 (1978).

Comparative Negligence Statute Not to Be Applied Retroactively: Summary judgment was properly granted defendant where plaintiff was contributorily negligent in a slip and fall case, as the comparative negligence statute is not a procedural law but a substantive law in nature with a presumption against retroactive effect and therefore does not apply to claims which might arise prior to its effective date. Dunham v. Southside Nat'l Bank of Missoula, 169 M 466, 548 P2d 1383 (1976), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Subsequently Enacted Legislation: Enactment providing that new highways shall not be constructed to bypass municipality without its consent would not be enforced in favor of nonconsenting municipality where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) had acquired rights and obligations and begun construction of bypass prior to enactment and where enactment did not expressly declare legislative intent to apply statute retroactively. Harlem v. St. Highway Comm'n, 149 M 281, 425 P2d 718 (1967).

Amendment to Bond Law: The amendment to 7-7-4205 by Ch. 62, L. 1945, did not apply to bonds issued prior to the enactment of such amendment. Philipsburg v. Porter, 121 M 188, 190 P2d 676 (1948).

PROCEDURAL CRIMINAL LAWS

Sentencing Under Version of Statute in Effect at Time of Offense — No Error When Penalty Not Reduced in Current Version of Statute: The defendant was convicted of outfitting without a license. Although he was alleged to have committed the acts in 2005, he was sentenced under the 2007 version of the criminalizing statute. On appeal, the defendant argued that the District Court erred in sentencing him under the 2007 statute. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that the penalty for a violation of the statute had not been reduced in the later version, and affirmed. St. v. Kebble, 2015 MT 195, 380 Mont. 69, 353 P.3d 1175.

Extended Statute of Limitations for Criminal Offense Applicable to Offenses Not Barred at Time of Amendment: When a statute is amended to extend the limitations period for a criminal offense, the extended limitations period applies to all offenses not barred at the time that the amendment was enacted. Mordja v. District Court, 2008 MT 24, 341 M 219, 177 P3d 439 (2008), overruling Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976), and other cases reaching conclusions to the contrary.

Extension of Criminal Statute of Limitations Not Considered Retroactive: The 1989 version of 45-1-205 provided that if the victim of sexual intercourse without consent was a minor at the time of the offense, the offender could be prosecuted up to 5 years after the victim turned 18 years old. In 2001, the Legislature extended the statute of limitations to expire 10 years after the victim turned 18 years old. The victim in this case turned 18 in 2001, and Mordja was charged in 2007, 5 years and 10 months after the victim turned 18. Mordja moved to dismiss the charges against him on grounds that the statute of limitations had expired. The District Court denied the motion, holding that because 45-1-205 was amended before the original statute of limitations expired in Mordja's case, the new limitations period applied to Mordja. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant cannot have a vested right in a statute of limitations that has not yet expired. The statute of limitations did not expire in Mordja's case before 45-1-205 was amended, so Mordja did not have any vested right in an affirmative defense. Application of the 2001 amendment to Mordja's case was not retroactive within the meaning of 1-2-109 because it did not affect Mordja's vested rights or impose any additional obligations or detriments on Mordja. Thus, the state had the right to prosecute Mordja at any time within the newly extended limitations period, and the District Court did not err in denying Mordja's motion to dismiss. Mordja v. District Court, 2008 MT 24, 341 M 219, 177 P3d 439 (2008), following St. v. Wright, 2001 MT 282, 307 M 349, 42 P3d 753 (2001), and Stogner v. Calif., 539 US 607 (2003).

Parent's Prior Conviction of Sexual Offense Properly Applied in Parental Rights Termination Proceeding — No Retroactive Statutory Application: During proceedings to terminate a father's parental rights, the state became aware of the father's prior 1985 conviction in Texas of a sexual offense involving a minor. The District Court held that the prior conviction was an aggravating circumstance under 41-3-423 for purposes of terminating the father's parental rights pursuant to 41-3-609. On appeal, the father argued that the court improperly applied the 1999 amendments to 41-3-423 and 41-3-609 retroactively to a criminal act that occurred at least 13 years prior to enactment of the amendments, in violation of the father's vested constitutional parental rights. Setting out the conditions of retroactivity, the Supreme Court noted that a statute does not operate retroactively merely because it is applied to conduct that occurs prior to the statute's enactment and that an amended statute that is applied to a factual situation that occurred prior to amendment is not viewed as retroactive in application. In this case, no additional sanction was imposed on the prior conviction by enactment of the new statutory provisions, but the prior conviction was made a condition for the termination of parental rights in the event that the children were subsequently neglected or abused. Moreover, the prior conviction did not require or inevitably lead to the children being abused or neglected, necessitating the filing of an abuse and neglect petition. Rather, the prior conviction became relevant as an independent ground for the state to petition for termination of parental rights only after the children were abused and neglected. Additionally, the statutes went into effect in 1999, and the termination proceeding was initiated in 2003, so the father was on notice that the prior conviction could be used as an aggravating circumstance to justify termination if the father allowed the children to be abused and neglected. Therefore, applying the 1999 versions of 41-3-423 and 41-3-609 to a conviction that occurred prior to 1999 did not constitute an unlawful retroactive application of the statutes. In re. M.A.L., D.L., & T.L., 2006 MT 299, 334 M 436, 148 P3d 606 (2006).

Proper Charge Under Definition of Felony Theft in Effect at Time Crime Committed: Between 1996 and 1999, podiatrist Daniels billed and received Medicaid reimbursement for a number of custom orthotic shoe inserts that were never provided to Medicaid-eligible patients. The 1999 Legislature increased the threshold amount for felony theft from $500 to $1,000, and Daniels argued that because the jury found him guilty of theft over $500 but made no findings that the value exceeded $1,000, he should have been sentenced for a misdemeanor instead of a felony. However, under St. v. Cline, 170 M 520, 555 P2d 724 (1976), persons alleged to have committed criminal offenses must be charged with violating the law in effect at the time that the crime was committed. Further, a change in the definition of an offense does not affect acts committed prior to the effective date of the definitional change. Daniels was properly charged, and the felony theft conviction was affirmed. St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 30, 314 M 208, 64 P3d 1045 (2003), distinguishing St. v. Wilson, 279 M 34, 926 P2d 712 (1996).

Retroactive Effect of Statute of Limitations on Petitions for Postconviction Relief: In 1997, the Legislature revised procedures for seeking postconviction relief, including a reduction in the statute of limitations for filing a petition from 5 years to 1 year after the date of final conviction. The revised statute of limitations was made to apply retroactively to all convictions occurring during the 12 months prior to the April 24, 1997, effective date of the amendments. Because this procedural change neither altered the definition of a crime nor increased a petitioner's punishment, the amended statute of limitations was not subject to the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto legislation. Wright's conviction fell within the period of retroactive applicability, so Wright had until April 24, 1998, to file a petition for postconviction relief, but did not file until November 16, 2000, in violation of the statute of limitations. The postconviction statute of limitations is a jurisdictional limit on litigation that will be waived by the Supreme Court only when there is a clear miscarriage of justice so obvious as to render the judgment void, and the miscarriage of justice exception does not apply to postconviction claims unless a constitutional violation has resulted in the conviction of an innocent person or unless newly discovered evidence establishes innocence. Wright raised neither of those issues, so the Supreme Court declined to waive the statute of limitations. The District Court's denial of Wright's petition for postconviction relief was affirmed. St. v. Wright, 2001 MT 247, 307 M 100, 38 P3d 772 (2001).

Retroactivity of New Judicial Rules and Judicial Interpretation — Section 46-23-1012 (1999) Applied Retroactively to Parole Revocations Between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001: On April 26, 2001, the Supreme Court held that a probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. On May 4, 2001, Goebel petitioned the court to look beyond the plain language of 46-23-1012 and hold that the probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender has been arrested by a probation officer rather than pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Effective May 1, 2001, the Legislature amended 46-23-1012 to delete the requirement for a probable cause hearing. On May 9, 2001, Giddings filed a petition for rehearing, asking the court to direct the District Court to dismiss the petition to revoke Giddings' suspended sentence on grounds that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to revoke the suspended sentence because of the amendment to 46-23-1012, contending that application of the new statute would violate the constitutional ban on ex post facto legislation. The Supreme Court declined to modify the decision in either Goebel or Giddings because no material fact or question decisive of the cases themselves was overlooked and the decisions did not conflict with any express statute or controlling decision. However, the court did discuss the retroactive application of judicial rules of criminal procedure and the judicial interpretation of a statute, as well as the claim that the retroactive application of 46-23-1012 was a violation of the ex post facto clause. Citing Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 US 298 (1994), the court held that a court's interpretation of a statute is never new law because the decision declares what the statute meant from the day of its enactment, not from the date of the decision. In determining whether a statute violates the ex post facto clause, the court referred to the test in St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453 (2000), which provided that to be in violation of the clause, a statute must be retrospective and must disadvantage the offender affected by it. In this case, Giddings was not disadvantaged because the statutory change did not alter the definition of or punishment for the probation violation that Giddings was charged with. Further, the error that was the basis for reversal of Giddings' case was jurisdictional, so all proceedings in the District Court were void ab initio, and the state was entitled to proceed anew, following the procedure outlined in the newly amended version of 46-23-1012. The Supreme Court's decisions based on the 1999 version of 46-23-1012 were applicable retroactively to persons whose probation or parole was revoked between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001. Thus, if a person was arrested during that period pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge and was not afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did not have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing, so the state could refile the petition to revoke the person's probation pursuant to the 2001 version of 46-23-1012, as long as the probationer was still under the custody or supervision of the Department of Corrections on May 1, 2001. If the person was afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 155, 306 M 83, 31 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Finley, 2003 MT 239, 317 M 268, 77 P3d 193 (2003).

Violent Offender Registration Requirement Not Retroactive: Prior to July 1993, Whitmer was sentenced for felony assault (now assault with a weapon). Upon his release in January 1996, Whitmer was notified of his obligation to register as a violent offender. Whitmer did not register and was charged with and convicted of failure to register as a violent offender. On appeal, he claimed that the 1995 amendments to 46-23-504, which added individuals convicted of a violent offense to the list of those required to register, did not apply retroactively. Although the original bill adding the amendments did contain a retroactive applicability clause, the clause was removed during the legislative process when the issue arose that applying the law retroactively might violate the ban on ex post facto legislation. The Legislature did not express its intent to apply the amendments retroactively in the final version of the bill. Therefore, Whitmer had no obligation to register after his release from prison because the amendments did not apply to crimes committed before October 1, 1995. Whitmer's conviction on failure to register was reversed. St. v. Whitmer, 285 M 100, 946 P2d 137, 54 St. Rep. 1063 (1997).

Application of Repealed Dangerous Offender Law to Offender Who Committed Crime Before Repeal and Was Sentenced After Repeal: The rule that the sentencing law in effect at the that time a crime is committed governs the sentence to be imposed applies to situations in which that law is amended after the crime is committed but before the sentence is imposed and in which the law still exists when the sentence is imposed. It is the law as it read prior to the amendment that governs the sentence. This rule does not apply to a situation in which a sentencing law in effect when a crime is committed is repealed before imposition of sentence. In this case, a dangerous offender statute in effect when Wilson committed his crimes was repealed before the judge sentenced him for the crimes, yet the judge used it to designate Wilson as a dangerous offender, thus increasing the punishment. In this type of situation, when the effect of the repeal is to lessen, not to increase, punishment and the repealer has no saving clause, the law in effect at the time of sentencing applies. Because the dangerous offender statute had been repealed before sentencing, it was not in effect at the time of sentencing and did not apply to the sentence. St. v. Wilson, 279 M 34, 926 P2d 712, 53 St. Rep. 1034 (1996).

Ex Post Facto: The substantive portion of the aggravated kidnapping statute, enumerating the elements of the crime and declaring the quantum of punishment, has not been altered since its enactment in 1973. The changes made by the 1977 Legislature ameliorated a mandatory death penalty to one imposed only after certain procedural steps were taken. Those procedural steps were followed in the resentencing of Dewey Coleman. At the time the crime was committed the statutes were clear that the penalty of death was a very probable consequence for the commission of the crime. Therefore, the District Court properly applied the 1977 statutes relating to the imposition of the death penalty, and it was not an ex post facto violation. St. v. Coleman, 185 M 299, 605 P2d 1000 (1979).

Retroactive Application of Death Penalty Provisions — No Ex Post Facto Violation: Where after the commission of the crime of homicide, the U.S. Supreme Court found the death penalty statute unconstitutional and the state Legislature took only the procedural step of redefining the punishment, not the crime, there is no ex post facto violation in upholding the previous death penalty imposed, since the defendant had "fair warning" of the consequences of homicide. St. v. Coleman, 185 M 299, 605 P2d 1000 (1979).

Retroactive Power to Prosecute Crimes: The statutory grant of authority of 5-13-310 is a procedural statute which may be given retroactive effect. St. v. Cline, 170 M 520, 555 P2d 724 (1976).

SUBSTANTIVE CRIMINAL LAWS

New Conditions of Parole Imposed After Original Sentence — No Increase in Punishment — No Ex Post Facto Violation: The criminal defendant had originally been sentenced to 30 years in prison with 10 years suspended. After being discharged to serve the suspended portion of his sentence, he violated the conditions of his parole. The District Court imposed a new suspended sentence with 14 new conditions, and the defendant argued that the imposition of the conditions violated ex post facto laws. The state argued that the conditions did not violate ex post facto laws because they did not increase the defendant's original sentence and were standard conditions placed on sex offenders who are on parole. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the new conditions were not punitive in nature and therefore affirmed the sentence. St. v. Piller, 2014 MT 342, 377 Mont. 374, 343 P.3d 153.

Reference to Other Sections — Subsequent Changes — Not Retroactive: In 1975 the official misconduct criminal statute (45-7-401) was expanded to include a violation of the open meeting law (2-3-203). In 1977 a broad definition of "meeting" was enacted (2-3-202). In 1979 1-2-108 was amended, creating the presumption that a reference to a section encompasses subsequent changes. However, because this section states that no law is retroactive unless expressly declared to be, 1-2-108 does not act to incorporate the 1977 definition of "meeting" into the 1975 criminal statute. St. v. Conrad, 197 M 406, 643 P2d 239, 39 St. Rep. 680 (1982).

CIVIL PENALTY LAWS

No Retroactive Application When Amended Statute Applied to Factual Situation Occurring Prior to Amendment: Section 61-8-402 was amended in 1983 to provide for a 1-year revocation of a driver's license upon the holder's refusal to submit to a chemical test within 5 years of a previous refusal. The court held that application of this provision, when the first refusal had occurred prior to the 1983 amendment, was not a retroactive application of law precluded by 1-2-109. Stiffarm v. Furois, 217 M 335, 704 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 1227 (1985).

Attorney General's Opinions

No Revival of Previously Barred Paternity Actions by Adoption of New Statute of Limitations: In conformity with the general rule disfavoring retroactive application of legislation, the 1987 change in the statute of limitations for paternity actions initiated by a state agency did not revive actions barred under the previous statute of limitations. 42 A.G. Op. 99 (1988).

Deputy Sheriffs and Undersheriffs — Compensatory Time: Since no statutory right to compensation for overtime for Deputy Sheriffs and undersheriffs existed prior to enactment of 7-4-2509 in 1981, they are not entitled to a cash payment in lieu of compensatory time off for overtime hours worked before July 1, 1981 (The opinion inadvertently referred to July, but the correct month is October. Chapter 603, L. 1981, which enacted 7-4-2509, did not contain a specific effective date provision, and the effective date is thus October 1, 1981, under 1-2-201 as amended by Ch. 466, L. 1981). The enactment of 7-4-2509 was not expressly retroactive. 40 A.G. Op. 55 (1984).

Planning Board Appointees — Residency — Law Not Retroactive: Members of a City-County Planning Board appointed prior to July 1, 1979, remain qualified to serve out their appointed terms although new residence requirements were enacted after they began their terms. A statute must be expressly declared retroactive to be retroactive. The amended residence requirements statute had no such declaration and so has only prospective application. 38 A.G. Op. 28 (1979).

Retroactive Effect of Firemen's Salaries: The law relating to firemen's salaries is not applied retroactively. 37 A.G. Op. 8 (1977).

Fees and Bonds: A law is retroactive if it takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law or creates a new obligation, duty, or disability respecting past transactions. It is not retroactive merely because it relates to prior facts or transactions without changing their legal effect or because some of the requisites for its operation are drawn from a time prior to the law's passage. Law exempting the state from fees and bonds on its mining operations applied to operations then existing and could not be objected to as being retroactive. 36 A.G. Op. 31 (1975).

Section With No Indication of Retroactivity: A code section was not retroactive where it did not contain an express declaration of retroactivity and none of its language could be construed to show a clear legislative intent of retroactivity. 30 A.G. Op. 17 (1963).

1-2-110. All statutes subject to repeal.

Case Notes

Repeal by Implication Not Favored: The Supreme Court looks with disfavor upon repeal by implication. Without an express declaration by the Legislature that an enactment repeals an existing law, a later statute will not repeal an earlier law unless the two are plainly and irreconcilably repugnant to or in conflict with each other. W.R. Grace & Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 238 M 439, 779 P2d 470, 46 St. Rep. 1399 (1989).

Veterans' Preference Gratuity — Not Vested Right: Plaintiff served in the capacity of deputy clerk of the Supreme Court for 20 years. He ran for the Clerk of Court position but was defeated. The newly elected Clerk terminated plaintiff and appointed a new deputy. Plaintiff contended that as a veteran he was entitled to a preference in employment and that the Legislature's repeal of the former veterans' preference law was invalid. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the veterans' preference rights granted under the repealed portion of the veterans' preference law are not rights earned through years of service to the state, but are a gratuity given to citizens of Montana by the state to show its appreciation for service in the armed forces. They do not amount to rights vested in the veterans. The Legislature could properly repeal the law by majority vote at any time, and veterans acting under the old law are considered to have acted in contemplation of the Legislature's power of repeal. Conboy v. St., 214 M 492, 693 P2d 547, 42 St. Rep. 120 (1985), followed in Nick v. Dept. of Highways, 219 M 168, 711 P2d 795, 42 St. Rep. 1926 (1985).

Termination of Pending Proceedings: Although under common law repeal of a statute terminated all pending proceedings, priority of plaintiff's petition for appropriation of water, filed before repeal of the former water law, was an existing right preserved under Art. IX, sec. 3(1), Mont. Const. Gen. Ag. Corp. v. Moore, 166 M 510, 534 P2d 859 (1975).

Basis for Appellate Review: Notwithstanding this section, an appellate court on appeal from an order of the Livestock Commission (now the Board of Livestock) must apply the law in effect when the Commission made its order. Peterson v. Livestock Comm'n, 120 M 140, 181 P2d 152 (1947).

Effect of Repeal on Remedies and Pending Actions: It is the general rule that the repeal of a statute without any reservation takes away all the remedies existing under the repealed act and defeats all actions pending under it at the time of its repeal. The rule is peculiarly applicable to the repeal of a statute which creates a cause of action providing a remedy not known to the common law. This principle is in harmony with the above section. Cont. Oil Co. v. Mont. Concrete Co., 63 M 223, 207 P 116 (1922).

Attorney General's Opinions

Inconsistent Statutes: When two statutes are wholly inconsistent, incompatible, and incapable of being reconciled, the later statute impliedly repeals the earlier one if it does not expressly do so. 38 A.G. Op. 13 (1979).

1-2-112. Statutes imposing new local government duties.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 574 in (1) in first sentence substituted "As provided in subsection (3)" for "Except as provided in this section", near middle after "additional funds" inserted "and that is not expected of local governments in the scope of their usual operations", and at end substituted "a mill levy" for "mill levies or the all-purpose mill levy"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The legislature may fulfill the requirements of this section by providing for an increase in the existing authorized mill levies, the all-purpose mill levy, special mill levies, or the remission of money by the state to local governments. However, an increase in the existing authorized mill levies, the all-purpose mill levy, or any special mill levy must provide an amount necessary to finance the additional costs, and if financing is provided by remission of funds by the state, the remission must bear a reasonable relationship to the actual cost of performing the activity or providing the service or facility"; inserted (3) enumerating mandates legislature is required to fund; in (4) in introductory clause substituted "Subsection (1)" for "This section"; inserted (4)(a) enumerating areas to which subsection (1) does not apply; in (4)(b) in second sentence substituted "1 mill" for "0.1 mill or less" and after "unit" inserted "or $10,000, whichever is less"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 246 in (1), at beginning, inserted exception clause; inserted (4)(b) regarding implementation of National Voter Registration Act; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 11, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 416 in (1), in first sentence after "legislature", deleted "after July 1, 1979" and after "other than" deleted "the existing authorized" and in second sentence, after "finance any", inserted "activity", after "facility" deleted "other than the existing authorized mill levies or the all-purpose mill levy", and at end inserted "from state or federal funds"; in (4), at end of first sentence, substituted "an insubstantial amount that can be readily absorbed into the budget of an existing program" for "incidental to the main purpose of the law" and inserted second sentence determining mill levy considered an insubstantial amount; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 7, Ch. 416, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Attorney General's Opinions

Property Tax Freeze and Additional Local Funds for Workers' Compensation — Both Applicable to Local Governments: Local governments must meet the requirements of both Ch. 664, L. 1987, requiring additional local funding for the workers' compensation fund, and Ch. 654, L. 1987, implementing the property tax freeze. The additional funding requirement did not constitute an implied repeal of the property tax freeze. 42 A.G. Op. 30 (1987).

Required Supplemental Funding for Workers' Compensation — Local Funds Incidental to Purpose of Act: The Legislature had the authority to pass Title 39, ch. 71, part 25 (now repealed), establishing supplemental funding for workers' compensation, without giving local governments the ability to raise new revenues to pay for that liability because the additional local funds were incidental to the main purposes of the law. 42 A.G. Op. 30 (1987).

All-Purpose Mill Levy — Forfeiture of Powers: Municipalities that adopt the all-purpose mill levy authorized in 7-6-4452 (now repealed) forfeit the power to impose levies for any particular purpose not clearly excepted by statute. Thus, the all-purpose mill levy supplants the taxing authority granted in 7-33-4111, 19-10-301 (renumbered 19-19-301), and 19-11-503 (renumbered 19-18-503) but does not supplant the taxing authority granted in 7-32-4117, 7-33-4130, 19-3-204, 19-9-704 (renumbered 19-9-209), sec. 2, Ch. 324, L. 1975 (not codified), sec. 2, Ch. 359, L. 1975 (not codified), and sec. 3, Ch. 438, L. 1975 (not codified). 38 A.G. Op. 112 (1980).

1-2-113. Statutes imposing new duties on a school district to provide means of financing.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 416 in (1), in first sentence after "legislature", deleted "after July 1, 1981, except any law implementing a federal law or a court decision"; in (3), after "approved", deleted "after October 1, 1981"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 7, Ch. 416, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Section Superseded: Section 8, Ch. 664, L. 1987, provided that Ch. 664 supersedes 1-2-113 as it may apply to Ch. 664. Chapter 664 enacted an employers' payroll tax to help lower the unfunded liability of the state workers' compensation fund. "Employer" includes a school district.

Attorney General's Opinions

Property Tax Freeze and Additional Local Funds for Workers' Compensation — Both Applicable to Local Governments: Local governments must meet the requirements of both Ch. 664, L. 1987, requiring additional local funding for the workers' compensation fund, and Ch. 654, L. 1987, implementing the property tax freeze. The additional funding requirement did not constitute an implied repeal of the property tax freeze. 42 A.G. Op. 30 (1987).

Required Supplemental Funding for Workers' Compensation — Local Funds Incidental to Purpose of Act: The Legislature had the authority to pass Title 39, ch. 71, part 25 (now repealed), establishing supplemental funding for workers' compensation, without giving local governments the ability to raise new revenues to pay for that liability because the additional local funds were incidental to the main purposes of the law. 42 A.G. Case Notes

Requirement for Arrangement of Transportation for Delinquent Youth by District Court Held Constitutional — Counties Required to Pay Transportation Costs Only Within State — Unfunded Mandate Unaddressed: After the District Youth Court found that J.A. was a delinquent youth, the court committed J.A. to the custody of the Department of Corrections (DOC) for placement at a treatment center in Texas and ordered the DOC to pay the costs of transporting J.A. to that center. When the DOC refused to pay those costs, Lake County paid the costs but later challenged the constitutionality of 52-5-109 as being a violation of the doctrine of the separation of powers and, in addition, argued that 52-5-109 is an unfunded mandate in violation of this section and that 52-5-101 and 52-5-109 require Lake County to pay for transportation costs only within Montana. The Supreme Court held that the requirement of 52-5-109 that the District Court "arrange the transportation" of a committed youth does not encroach on judicial authority, require the judiciary to exercise executive power, or interfere with internal judicial operations, but, in the context of the statutes, is only an administrative detail. The Supreme Court also held that it was logical to assume that the DOC, being a Montana state agency, would receive custody only within Montana and not in some other state. The Supreme Court pointed out that 52-5-101 names only in-state institutions for the commitment of youth and that neither that statute nor 52-5-109 makes any mention of out-of-state facilities and, for those reasons, ruled that the DOC must pay for transportation costs of a committed youth outside of the State of Montana. Because the Supreme Court considered its holding "dispositive", it declined to address the issue of whether 52-5-109 is an unfunded mandate in violation of this section. In re J.A., 1999 MT 148, 295 M 46, 983 P2d 327, 56 St. Rep. 585 (1999).

Effect of Legislature's Actions

Part Case Notes

Prima Facie Constitutionality of Legislative Enactments — Limit on Court Contravention of Legislative Power: The constitutionality of a legislative enactment is prima facie presumed, and every intendment in its favor will be presumed unless its unconstitutionality appears beyond reasonable doubt. When the Legislature acts within its constitutional power, courts are unable to contravene such power on any court-presumed grounds of fairness, absent equal protection consequences. Fallon County v. St., 231 M 443, 753 P2d 338, 45 St. Rep. 748 (1988), followed in Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 259 M 147, 855 P2d 506, 50 St. Rep. 731 (1993). See also St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998).

1-2-201. Statutes — effective date.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 104 in (1)(a) in exception clause inserted reference to subsection (1)(d); at beginning of (1)(b) and (1)(c) inserted "Subject to subsection (1)(d)"; inserted (1)(d) concerning immediate effective date for statutes enacted during a special session of the legislature; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 24, 2003.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 18 at end of (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c) substituted "in the enacting legislation" for "therein"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (1)(a), at beginning, inserted exception clause and after "1981" deleted "except those that provide for appropriation by the legislature of public funds for a public purpose"; in (1)(b), after "appropriation", substituted "by the legislature for public funds for a public purpose" for "as specified in this subsection"; inserted (1)(c) establishing the first day of January following passage and approval as the effective date for statutes that provide taxation or a fee on motor vehicles; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 17, Ch. 604, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1991, and applies to motor vehicles, boats, snowmobiles, and off-highway vehicles that must be registered or reregistered on or after July 1, 1991."

1981 Amendment: In (1) substituted language related to effective dates of October 1 for general legislation and July 1 for appropriations unless otherwise specified for "Every statute, unless a different time is prescribed therein, takes effect on the first day of July following its passage and approval".

Case Notes

Effective Date Unambiguous: The Legislature passed a bill that repealed one sentencing provision and amended another related to designation of a defendant as a persistent felony offender. A defendant was charged with a felony before the passage of the bill and sentenced by the District Court after it went into effect. On appeal, the defendant argued that the District Court erred by sentencing him under the prior, repealed provision. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the plain language of the effective date section of the bill clearly expressed the Legislature's intent that offenses committed before the effective date of the act would be subject to the prior version of the law. St. v. Thomas, 2019 MT 155, 396 Mont. 284, 445 P.3d 777.

Claim of Justifiable Killing of Dog in March Not Governed by Statute Effective in October: Walter shot a dog on March 7, 1993, and was subsequently convicted of misdemeanor cruelty to animals under 45-8-211. Walter defended on the basis that his actions were justified under 81-7-401. Walter, the state, and the District Court applied the version of 81-7-401 effective October 1993. This version of the statute allowed the owner of livestock to shoot a dog if it was harassing livestock. The Supreme Court held that Walter, the state, and the District Court applied the wrong version of the law. Because the killing happened in March of 1993, the statute that should have been applied was the version in effect in March and not the version that became effective in October. Injury to livestock was required under the effective version of the statute. St. v. Walter, 266 M 429, 880 P2d 1346, 51 St. Rep. 903 (1994).

Referred Measures: Under this section, every statute, unless a definite time is prescribed therein, takes effect on July 1 of the year of passage and approval (1979 amendment changed "of the year of" to "following"; 1981 amendment changed date to October 1 following passage and approval) and remains in full force and effect during the interim in which the referendum clause of the Constitution may be resorted to under Art. V, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. III, sec. 5(2), 1972 Mont. Const.), unless it becomes "inoperative" by reason of the signing of a petition for referendum by 15% of the legal voters of a majority of the whole number of counties of the state, under such constitutional provision. Lodge v. Ayers, 108 M 527, 91 P2d 691 (1939).

Attorney General's Opinions

Mill Levy Increase — Proration to Parts of Fiscal Year to Accommodate October Effective Date: Section 7-14-2501 was amended in 1981 to authorize the Board of County Commissioners to levy 15 mills rather than 12 mills for the county road fund. The increase, under the 1981 amendments to 1-2-201, becomes effective October 1, 1981. However the county budget year begins July 1, 1981. The reasonable way to give effect to both amendments is to construe them to allow the Board to apply a rate of 12 mills for the 3 months of the current county fiscal year which fall before October 1, 1981, and a rate of 15 mills for the 9 months of the current county fiscal year which fall after October 1, 1981. (See 2001 amendment to 7-14-2501.) 39 A.G. Op. 29 (1981).

1-2-203. Effect of amendment of statute.

Case Notes

Law in Effect at Time of Offense Controls: A District Court's imposition of costs in the amount of $800 to cover the defendant's cost of a public defender was reversed and remanded to District Court on the grounds that 46-8-113 allowed only up to $500 for costs of counsel in a felony case at the time of the offense. St. v. Dietsch, 2013 MT 245, 371 Mont. 460, 308 P.3d 111.

Proper Charge Under Definition of Felony Theft in Effect at Time Crime Committed: Between 1996 and 1999, podiatrist Daniels billed and received Medicaid reimbursement for a number of custom orthotic shoe inserts that were never provided to Medicaid-eligible patients. The 1999 Legislature increased the threshold amount for felony theft from $500 to $1,000, and Daniels argued that because the jury found him guilty of theft over $500 but made no findings that the value exceeded $1,000, he should have been sentenced for a misdemeanor instead of a felony. However, under St. v. Cline, 170 M 520, 555 P2d 724 (1976), persons alleged to have committed criminal offenses must be charged with violating the law in effect at the time that the crime was committed. Further, a change in the definition of an offense does not affect acts committed prior to the effective date of the definitional change. Daniels was properly charged, and the felony theft conviction was affirmed. St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 30, 314 M 208, 64 P3d 1045 (2003), distinguishing St. v. Wilson, 279 M 34, 926 P2d 712 (1996).

Legislative Intent in Adopting Amendments: A Legislature in adopting an amendment is presumed to intend some change in the existing law, and the courts will endeavor to give effect to that amendment. Gwynn v. Eureka, 178 M 191, 582 P2d 1262 (1978), following State ex rel. Jones v. Giles, 168 M 130, 541 P2d 355 (1975).

Implied Repeal by Amendment of Conflicting Law: Section 3-10-303 was not repealed by implication by the subsequent amendment of section 4-413, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), by Ch. 71, L. 1953, since under this provision, the amendment of section 4-413, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), did not have the effect of reenacting those provisions which were not altered. St. v. Wild, 130 M 476, 305 P2d 325 (1956).

Original Meaning Preserved:

Where statute as originally enacted was clear as to meaning of word "return", language added by subsequent amendment will not be held to have changed the original meaning since the main clause first enacted will not be regarded as a complete new enactment to be explained or modified by the new matter added. State ex rel. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. v. District Court, 115 M 521, 146 P2d 1012 (1944).

Where the substance of 7-6-2501 was never changed, although other subdivisions of the statute as originally enacted had been subsequently amended, under this section the unchanged portion must be given the same meaning as it originally had. N. Pac. Ry. v. Dunham, 108 M 338, 90 P2d 506 (1939).

Continuation of Prior Provisions:

Under this section, where a section or a part of a statute is amended, the portions thereof which are not altered are to be considered as having been the law from the time when they were enacted, and the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment. Blackford v. Judith Basin County, 109 M 578, 98 P2d 872 (1940).

Where a statute or section of the Codes is amended merely by adding to or taking therefrom, the portion carried forward in the new law is not a new act but has been the law since the beginning. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Jacobson, 107 M 461, 86 P2d 9 (1938).

The true rule in this state is that where a section or a part of a statute is amended, it is not to be considered as repealed and enacted in its new form. The portions which are not amended are considered to have been in force from the time of the first enactment. Snidow v. Mont. Home for the Aged, 88 M 337, 292 P 723 (1930). See also St. v. Yale Oil Corp., 88 M 506, 295 P 255 (1930).

Ambiguity in Amendment: Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of the amendment of a statute, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general tenor and spirit of the act amended. In re Klune, 74 M 332, 240 P 286 (1925).

Repeal by Omission: Where the Legislature declares that an existing statute is amended "to read as follows", the new act takes the place of the old one exclusively, and so much only of the original act as is repeated in the new statute is continued in force. State ex rel. Paige v. District Court, 54 M 332, 169 P 1180 (1918).

Common-Law Rule: This section merely states a general rule as it was recognized by the authorities at the time of the adoption of the Codes. State ex rel. Jacobson v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 47 M 531, 134 P 291 (1913).

Right of Access to Sealed Original Birth Records: Considering the legislative history, 50-15-206 (now repealed), as amended in 1979, prohibits disclosure of illegitimacy of birth or information from which illegitimacy can be ascertained except upon court order. This conflicts with 50-15-304, which would allow an adopted illegitimately born person access to his or her sealed original birth records upon demand. Section 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was enacted as part of a 1979 amendment to that section. Under 1-2-203, "the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment". Earlier statutes are controlled by later statutes when they conflict, so 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) controls. Additionally, when a specific statute conflicts with a general statute, the specific statute controls to the extent of any conflict. Under this rule of construction, 50-15-304 was considered the general statute dealing with the birth records of adopted persons, and 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was considered a more specific statute regulating disclosure of birth records of illegitimate adopted persons, the statute which controlled. Therefore, legitimately born adopted persons of legal age may have their sealed original birth records opened on demand while illegitimately born adopted persons may apply to court for disclosure of their sealed original birth records. 38 A.G. Op. 62 (1980).

Deleted Subsection Not Revised by Contemporaneous Amendment: The amendment by Ch. 428 and Ch. 443, L. 1979, of former subsection (2) of 7-4-4201, which was deleted and in effect repealed by Ch. 221, L. 1979, did not have the effect of reviving former subsection (2). Neither Ch. 428 nor Ch. 443, L. 1979, expressly repealed Ch. 221, L. 1979, and there is a strong presumption against implied repeal. It is not possible for the Legislature to put life into a dead statute by amendment of it. 38 A.G. Op. 45 (1979).

1-2-204. Amendment of repealed act void.

Case Notes

Inadvertent Repeal: This section applies even though the act sought to be amended has been inadvertently repealed. Dept. of Revenue v. Burlington N., Inc., 169 M 202, 545 P2d 1083 (1976).

Repeal by Implication: This section applies where the act is repealed by implication. St. v. Holt, 121 M 459, 194 P2d 651 (1948).

Attorney General's Opinions

Amendment of Section Repealed During Same Legislative Session: The 1979 amendments to 15-6-102 through 15-6-121 made by Ch. 686, Ch. 706, and Ch. 712, L. 1979, are void by virtue of the repeal of those sections by Ch. 693, L. 1979. 38 A.G. Op. 71 (1980).

Deleted Subsection Not Revised by Contemporaneous Amendment: The amendment by Ch. 428 and Ch. 443, L. 1979, of former subsection (2) of 7-4-4201, which was deleted and in effect repealed by Ch. 221, L. 1979, did not have the effect of reviving former subsection (2). Neither Ch. 428 nor Ch. 443, L. 1979, expressly repealed Ch. 221, L. 1979, and there is a strong presumption against implied repeal. It is not possible for the Legislature to put life into a dead statute by amendment of it. 38 A.G. Op. 45 (1979).

1-2-205. Repeal of law creating criminal offense.

Case Notes

Commencement of Felony Prosecution Possible — Mootness: Plaintiff caregivers alleged the 2009 Medical Marijuana Act allowed caregiver-to-caregiver transactions for the purpose of supplying qualified patients with medical marijuana. The MMA was amended in 2011 to prohibit caregiver-to-caregiver transactions, but the plaintiffs' declaratory judgment claim was not rendered moot since the plaintiffs could theoretically be charged under the 2009 MMA up to 5 years from the date of the alleged offense. Medical Marijuana Growers Ass'n, Inc. v. Corrigan, 2012 MT 146, 365 Mont. 346, 281 P.3d 210.

Proper Charge Under Definition of Felony Theft in Effect at Time Crime Committed: Between 1996 and 1999, podiatrist Daniels billed and received Medicaid reimbursement for a number of custom orthotic shoe inserts that were never provided to Medicaid-eligible patients. The 1999 Legislature increased the threshold amount for felony theft from $500 to $1,000, and Daniels argued that because the jury found him guilty of theft over $500 but made no findings that the value exceeded $1,000, he should have been sentenced for a misdemeanor instead of a felony. However, under St. v. Cline, 170 M 520, 555 P2d 724 (1976), persons alleged to have committed criminal offenses must be charged with violating the law in effect at the time that the crime was committed. Further, a change in the definition of an offense does not affect acts committed prior to the effective date of the definitional change. Daniels was properly charged, and the felony theft conviction was affirmed. St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 30, 314 M 208, 64 P3d 1045 (2003), distinguishing St. v. Wilson, 279 M 34, 926 P2d 712 (1996).

Application of Repealed Dangerous Offender Law to Offender Who Committed Crime Before Repeal and Was Sentenced After Repeal: The rule that the sentencing law in effect at the that time a crime is committed governs the sentence to be imposed applies to situations in which that law is amended after the crime is committed but before the sentence is imposed and in which the law still exists when the sentence is imposed. It is the law as it read prior to the amendment that governs the sentence. This rule does not apply to a situation in which a sentencing law in effect when a crime is committed is repealed before imposition of sentence. In this case, a dangerous offender statute in effect when Wilson committed his crimes was repealed before the judge sentenced him for the crimes, yet the judge used it to designate Wilson as a dangerous offender, thus increasing the punishment. In this type of situation, when the effect of the repeal is to lessen, not to increase, punishment and the repealer has no saving clause, the law in effect at the time of sentencing applies. Because the dangerous offender statute had been repealed before sentencing, it was not in effect at the time of sentencing and did not apply to the sentence. St. v. Wilson, 279 M 34, 926 P2d 712, 53 St. Rep. 1034 (1996).

Constitutionality: This section is to be interpreted so as to preserve for prosecution all criminal offenses committed prior to repeal, in absence of an express legislative intent to contrary contained in repealing act, irrespective of whether charges are filed before or after such repeal. Such interpretation does not violate Art. III, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 31, 1972 Mont. Const.), as ex post facto legislation. State ex rel. Huffman v. District Court, 154 M 201, 461 P2d 847 (1969).

Pending Prosecutions: The repeal of a criminal statute without a saving clause does not operate to terminate all pending prosecutions. St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959).

1-2-207. Repeal of repealing act — no revival.

Licensing of Motion Picture Theaters: In an action to collect alleged license taxes due for operation of several motion picture theaters, the defendant corporation was relieved of any liability on the rationale that it was not a theater as contemplated by 7-21-2205 (now repealed) and that it was not subject to section 84-3205, R.C.M. 1947, since the latter section was repealed by Ch. 91, L. 1937, in light of Montana's nonrevival provision, even though section 84-3205, R.C.M. 1947, was carried forward into the Revised Codes of Montana, 1947. State ex rel. Jenkins v. Carisch Theatres, Inc., 172 M 453, 564 P2d 1316 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

Deleted Subsection Not Revised by Contemporaneous Amendment: The amendment by Ch. 428 and Ch. 443, L. 1979, of former subsection (2) of 7-4-4201, which was deleted and in effect repealed by Ch. 221, L. 1979, did not have the effect of reviving former subsection (2). Neither Ch. 428 nor Ch. 443, L. 1979, expressly repealed Ch. 221, L. 1979, and there is a strong presumption against implied repeal. It is not possible for the Legislature to put life into a dead statute by amendment of it. 38 A.G. Op. 45 (1979).

1-2-208. Provisions of law not codified in Montana Code Annotated because redundant.

Compiler's Comments

Purpose: A provision of law not codified in the MCA because it is redundant with a codified provision is still in effect. If the codified provision is amended or repealed, one could argue that the uncodified provision is the law, since it is still in effect. This would create an obvious but unintended conflict. This section was passed to address such a situation. This section applies to RCM sections not codified in the MCA and to session laws passed since the MCA became effective.

Applicability of Deadline to Redistricting: The Supreme Court, in Barthelmess v. Bergerson, 218 M 398, 708 P2d 1010, 42 St. Rep. 1685 (1985), ordered the redistricting of Custer County to comply with 7-4-2102, including the provision that "no change in the boundary lines of any commissioner district shall be made within 6 months next preceding a primary election". A primary election was scheduled for June 2, 1986, necessitating a December 2, 1985, deadline for redistricting. On December 3, 1985, the two judges of the district issued a memorandum expressing concern over the inability to create new districts within the time prescribed by 7-4-2102, and not until January 3, 1986, was a redistricting plan reviewed and approved. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of the deadline was to prevent gerrymandering and to provide sufficient time for candidates for County Commissioner to file for election. The provision should not be construed so as to prevent the formation and filing of districts when, as here, the former districts did not meet the statutory requirements of compactness and equality of population. Strict enforcement of the 6-month provision in this case would prevent the residents from legally electing their Commissioners, disenfranchising the voters and impeding county business. The court stated the concept in 1-3-201 that when the reason for a rule ceases, the reason for its enforcement also ceases. By way of declaratory relief, the court upheld the January 3, 1986, districting plan and allowed the County Commissioners to append to the plan a copy of the court order in lieu of the requirement of 7-4-2103 that the certificate shall be dated and signed by the District Judges. Barthelmess v. Bergerson, 220 M 74, 713 P2d 990, 43 St. Rep. 186 (1986).

Change in Trial Judges: Rule that an appellate court will not ordinarily disturb findings of fact of a trial court where there is conflict in evidence is not applicable where deciding judge was not judge who heard testimony. Kostbade v. Metier, 150 M 139, 432 P2d 382 (1967).

Presumption on Trial Judge's Ruling: Where a judge, other than the one who presided at the trial, passes upon a motion for a new trial, the presumption in favor of the trial judge's ruling does not attach on appeal to his ruling. Gibson v. Morris St. Bank, 49 M 60, 140 P 76 (1914).

Pledge and Chattel Mortgage Assignees: A bona fide purchaser of property for value from a pledgee who sold it in violation of the pledge succeeds to all the rights of the pledgee, and under this section a purchaser from a chattel mortgagee will likewise succeed to the rights of his grantor with respect to the property purchased on the principle of subrogation, although there is no contract of assignment between him and his grantee. Acceptance of Partial Payment After Demanding Full Payment — Waiver of Right to Statutory Damages — Summary Judgment Warranted for Violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act: Plaintiff collection agency sought to collect $148.96 for eight of defendant's bad checks, plus a $30 service charge for each check, for a total of $388.96. Defendant sent a partial payment, which plaintiff accepted, but missed two promised payments, so plaintiff filed suit for the balance due, plus statutory damages of $100 for each of the eight checks. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court conclusion that the right of a payee on a dishonored check to pursue statutory damages is a right created solely for the payee's benefit and is subject to waiver under this section and that by accepting a partial payment after demanding full payment, plaintiff waived the right to statutory damages under 27-1-717. In order to reinstate the right to statutory damages, plaintiff was required to make further demand for full payment and wait the requisite 10 days before filing suit. The District Court also held that by seeking statutory damages without giving the requisite demand, plaintiff had attempted to collect an amount that was not permitted by law, in violation of 15 U.S.C. 1692f(1) of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Plaintiff contended that any mistake was a bona fide error, relieving plaintiff of liability under 15 U.S.C. 1692k(c). The Supreme Court again affirmed, accepting the majority view of Circuit Courts that the bona fide error defense is available only for clerical and factual errors and that plaintiff's mistake of law did not make its action any less intentional and was insufficient to rise to the level of a bona fide error. Summary judgment for defendant was proper. Collection Bureau Serv., Inc. v. Morrow, 2004 MT 84, 320 M 478, 87 P3d 1024 (2004). See also Baker v. G.C. Serv. Corp., 677 F2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982).

Waiver of Right to Earn Good Time Credits in Boot Camp Program — Incarceration for Full Term Not Considered Cruel and Unusual Punishment: After being sentenced to 5 years in prison for negligent homicide, Campbell applied for admission to the boot camp program. As part of the application process, Campbell was required to read and sign a detailed, clearly written explanation of program goals, objectives, rules, and criteria, which included an acknowledgment that Campbell would be ineligible for good time credits while in the program. Pursuant to its administrative authority, the Department of Corrections had determined that good time credits would conflict with the program's emphasis on positive achievement, earned rewards, and the possibility of sentence reductions for successful program completion. Campbell was accepted in the program and spent nearly 3 months in boot camp, but did not complete the program because of a series of infractions. As a consequence, Campbell did not earn either a sentence reduction or the good time credits that might have been earned in prison. Campbell then filed a writ of habeas corpus, contending that he had a right to good time credits and that the Department's refusal to award the credits deprived him of liberty without due process and resulted in his being held beyond the lawful term of his sentence, which constituted cruel and unusual punishment. The Supreme Court noted that under Orozco v. Day, 281 M 341, 934 P2d 1009 (1997), Campbell had a protected liberty interest in the opportunity to earn good times credits at boot camp. However, Campbell voluntarily chose to relinquish his interest in good time credits in order to gain the benefits of boot camp. Thus, the state did not deprive Campbell of anything, and his due process claim failed. The Supreme Court went on to examine the distinction between nonwaivable public rights and waivable private rights, as contemplated in this section, holding that there were no grounds to conclude that Campbell could not voluntarily waive his interest in good time credits. Allowing an inmate to waive good time credits does not defeat any protectionist purpose of the good time allowance statute, particularly when the inmate chooses to relinquish the benefits of one legislatively created program for another. Finally, Campbell's cruel and unusual punishment argument was predicated on the belief that he was entitled to good time credits, but by choosing to forego the opportunity to earn good time at boot camp, Campbell actually received all the good time credit to which he was entitled and could not complain that incarceration for the full term of his lawfully imposed sentence was cruel and unusual. Campbell v. Mahoney, 2001 MT 146, 306 M 45, 29 P3d 1034 (2001). See also Davidson v. Cannon, 474 US 344 (1986), and Zinermon v. Burch, 494 US 113 (1990).

Purpose of Choice of Law Rule — Public Policy Subsumed: Addressing the question of whether, in a personal injury and wrongful death action, Montana recognized a public policy exception that would require application of Montana law even when Montana's choice of law rules dictate application of the laws of another state, the Supreme Court noted that for choice of law purposes, the public policy of a state is simply the rules, as expressed in its legislative enactments and judicial decisions, that it uses to decide controversies. The purpose of choice of law rules is to resolve conflicts between competing policies. In this case, considerations of public policy were accounted for, being expressly subsumed within the "most significant relationship" approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6(2)(b) and (2)(c) (1971), which mandate consideration of the relevant policies of all the interested states, so a public policy exception to the most significant relationship test would have been redundant. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and Rothwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 1999 MT 50, 293 M 393, 976 P2d 512, 56 St. Rep. 203 (1999).

Sole Exception to Employer Indemnification — Waiver of Public Benefit of Indemnification by Employment Contract Inappropriate: The only exception to the requirement that an employer indemnify its employees, as required in 39-2-701, is that an employer is not bound to indemnify an employee for losses suffered in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business. In the present case, the employer argued that indemnification could be waived under this section if the parties agreed to a different relationship pursuant to the employment contract. However, under this section, the waiver of statutory rights is not allowable if the waiver violates public policy. Distinguishing several cases related to the waiver of private benefits, the Supreme Court held that indemnification of an employee for expenses incurred in the discharge of the employee's duties is a form of employee compensation similar to the payment of overtime compensation and minimum wage and constitutes an expression of public policy. Thus, even though 39-2-701 is not accompanied by an express statement of public policy or an express prohibition of contracts that waive the right to indemnify, waiver of the indemnification provisions by contract would, in this instance, result in forfeiture of a valuable right guaranteed as a public benefit to all Montana employees and therefore is not allowed. Rothwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 1999 MT 50, 293 M 393, 976 P2d 512, 56 St. Rep. 203 (1999).

Waiver of Workers' Compensation Benefits Allowed — Distribution of Proportionate Share of Benefits: Decedent who died in the course of employment was survived by two children of a prior marriage and by the widow of a second marriage. Decedent's insurer and others with potential liability for death claims settled with the widow for substantial sums, but the children were not parties to the settlement. No workers' compensation claim was filed by the widow, though one was filed by decedent's employer. The compensation carrier began paying one-third of the compensation benefits to the widow and reserved two-thirds pending final determination of the children as beneficiaries. The widow advised the carrier that she did not wish to receive workers' compensation benefits and returned those she had been issued. The Workers' Compensation Court held that, as a matter of public policy, the widow could not waive death benefits and that the children's interest in the benefits would vest only if the widow died or remarried prior to the passing of 500 weeks after decedent's death. On rehearing, the court found the children to be stepchildren of the widow and therefore entitled to benefits, to be equally divided between the parties. The children appealed, contending that the widow should not be compelled to receive benefits she did not claim or intended to waive and that the children were each entitled to one-half of all available benefits. The Supreme Court held that under this section, the surviving widow could waive or abandon her right to benefits and that upon waiver the surviving children were entitled to no more than their proportionate share provided by law. In re Benefits of Gaither, 244 M 383, 797 P2d 208, 47 St. Rep. 1549 (1990).

Effect of "As Is" Clause in Used Car Sales Agreement: When defendant failed to inspect a car for defects before sale to plaintiff and the defect that was the proximate cause of plaintiff's accident and subsequent injuries would have been discovered in a reasonable safety inspection, defendant should not be allowed to hide behind the cloak of a simple "as is" disclaimer. Public policy requires a used car dealer to inspect the cars he sells and to make sure they are in safe, working condition. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

Release Void as Contrary to Public Policy: This section together with 27-1-701 and 28-2-701 was broad enough to render illegal any exculpatory clause or release relieving a potential tortfeasor from all liability for future negligent conduct where such clause or release was contrary to public policy or against the public interest. A release relieving County Fair Board from any liability to livestock while on fairgrounds was illegal and unenforceable as contrary to public policy and against public interest and precluded county from disclaiming liability in negligence action for exhibitor's horses killed in barn fire on county fairgrounds. Suppression of release in exhibitor's negligence action was not error or ground for new trial. Haynes v. Missoula County, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370 (1973).

Possessory Rights of Tenant: The benefits of 70-19-412 may be waived by the terms of a lease. Johnstone v. Sanborn, 138 M 467, 358 P2d 399 (1960).

Venue Established by Contract: Defendant in action to recover monthly rental for electric signs was not entitled to change of venue where stipulation in contract established venue of any future suit or action instituted for enforcement of contract. Elec. Products Consol. v. Bodell, 132 M 243, 316 P2d 788 (1957).

Implied Waiver: Under this section one may waive by implication or by agreement the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit. H. Earl Clack Co. v. Staunton, 105 M 375, 72 P2d 1022 (1937); Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Ravalli County, 56 M 530, 186 P 332 (1919).

Failure to Act as Waiver: Plaintiff who did nothing toward having a decree of foreclosure amended for a period of more than 6 months and whose action was not filed for more than a year after foreclosure sale was not entitled to relief; one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Gallatin County, 84 M 98, 274 P 288 (1929).

Employment Benefits: An employee may waive the advantage of any provision of law that was intended solely for his benefit so long as the waiver does not violate public policy. Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

Notice of Judgment: The party intending to move for a new trial may waive formal notice of entry of judgment and serve his notice of intention without it. State ex rel. Brown v. District Court, 55 M 158, 174 P 601 (1918).

Statute of Limitations: A stipulation in a contract waiving the benefit of the Statute of Limitations is binding for a reasonable time, at least until the expiration of an additional period equal to that prescribed by the Statute for the particular cause of action. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914).

Time and Manner of Waiver:

A party may waive the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, either before or after the expiration of the prescribed limit, not only by either of the acts mentioned in 27-2-409 but also by express agreement based upon a consideration, though made contemporaneously with and as a part of the principal agreement or obligation out of which the action has arisen. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914). See Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

This section does not prescribe the time when or the mode by which the waiver may be made effective, nor does it impose any restriction or limitation upon the right of waiver. It must therefore be assumed that the party desiring to waive his right is free to do so in any way and at any time he chooses. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914).

Administration of Estate: The prior right conferred upon those most interested in an estate to administer it may be waived. In re Blackburn's Estate, 48 M 179, 137 P 381 (1913).

Justification by Sureties: The right to require the sureties on the undertaking on appeal to justify is personal to the exceptant and may therefore be waived by him. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Negotiability of Instruments: A provision in a note that it is negotiable at a particular bank is not a waiver of the effect of a stipulation for payment of attorney's fees in case of suit, which under other statutory provisions renders the note nonnegotiable. Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

Landowner's Duty:

The law does not countenance the principle that one tract of land may be reclaimed at the expense of the destruction of another without compensation. O'Hare v. Johnson, 116 M 410, 153 P2d 888 (1944), followed in St. v. Feenan, 231 M 255, 752 P2d 182, 45 St. Rep. 589 (1988).

A landowner who lets a contract for the repair of a skylight on the roof of his building is liable for damages caused by the negligent leaving of waste material on the roof in such manner that it was blown off and injured a nearby building, irrespective of whether the contractor was required to remove such waste material. A. M. Holter Hardware Co. v. W. Mtg. Co., 51 M 94, 149 P 489 (1915).

Use of Property:

One may use his own property as he sees fit for all purposes to which it is adaptable without being answerable for the consequences if he is not an active agent in designedly causing injury, if he does not create a nuisance, or if he exercises due care and caution to prevent injury, but must so use his right as not to infringe upon the rights of another. Purcell v. Davis, 100 M 480, 50 P2d 255 (1935).

The doctrine of the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas is not inconsistent with the rule of law that a man may use his own property as he pleases for all purposes for which it is adaptable without being answerable for the consequences if he is not an active agent in designedly causing injury, if he does not create a nuisance, or if he exercises due care and caution to prevent injury. Fleming v. Lockwood, 36 M 384, 92 P 962 (1907).

Police Power: The police power is not restricted to the regulation or supervision of what is offensive, disorderly, or insanitary but embraces regulation designed to promote the public convenience and the peace and good order of society, i.e., it may be exercised in aid of what is sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality and preponderant opinion to be necessary to the public welfare and has its foundation in the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. St. v. Loomis, 75 M 88, 242 P 344 (1925).

Water Rights:

One who has a prior right to the use of the waters of one creek cannot let those waters run to waste and use the full amount of his appropriation of the waters of another creek to the detriment of a junior appropriator on the latter creek. Noman v. Corbley, 32 M 195, 79 P 1059 (1905).

An appropriator of an upper water right who, in a contract to deliver it to a lower owner of land at a certain place, has reserved the right to use the water for placer mining purposes acquires no title to the water itself or any right to pollute the water to any greater extent than is permitted by law. Chessman v. Hale, 31 M 577, 79 P 254 (1905); Fitzpatrick v. Montgomery, 20 M 181, 50 P 416 (1897); Nelson v. O'Neal, 1 M 284 (1871); Lincoln v. Rodgers, 1 M 217 (1870).

Floodwaters of a river which become severed from the main current still form a part of the river and may not be obstructed by a railroad company by a fill along its right-of-way without openings so as to injure the property of another. Fordham v. N. Pac. Ry., 30 M 421, 76 P 1040 (1904). See Wine v. N. Pac. Ry., 48 M 200, 136 P 387 (1913); E. Oreg. Land Co. v. Willow River Land & Irrigation Co., 201 F 203 (9th Cir. 1912).

Equity Application: The maxim of jurisprudence announced in this section is a principle of substantive law peculiarly applicable to equity actions. Quinlan v. Calvert, 31 M 115, 77 P 428 (1904).

Divorce Proceedings: Even though a wife did not know the attorney whom she authorized to represent her in a divorce suit, in the absence of charges of misconduct against the attorney, she was not justified in attacking the divorce decree. Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

Irregular Tax Deed: Where a tax deed was invalid for failure to give the owner the statutory notice of application therefor, such owner could not be held to have waived his right to question the validity of the deed or acquiesced in the taking of his property by being represented at the county's public auction sale by an agent who bid on it, because he had no rights to waive by bidding on the property. Kerr v. Small, 112 M 490, 117 P2d 271 (1941).

Search and Seizure: Where officers searching the home of defendant, with his consent, found a quantity of mash in the process of manufacture into beer, they were properly permitted to give evidence as to what they found since one who consents to a search cannot complain that his constitutional rights were invaded by the search. St. v. Roop, 73 M 177, 235 P 336 (1925).

1-3-207. Acquiescence.

Case Notes

Failure to Renew Venue Objection During Voir Dire — Fatal on Appeal: During the District Court's jury selection proceeding in a civil trial, the state failed to renew a motion for change of venue, and it ultimately agreed to the 12 empaneled jurors. On appeal, the state claimed that the District Court abused its discretion by denying the state's original motion to change venue, as there were reports in a local newspaper that were allegedly biased in favor of the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court applied St. v. Kingman, 2011 MT 269, 362 Mont. 330, 264 P.3d 1104, even though it was a criminal case, and held that the state waived the opportunity to object to venue when it failed to give the District Court an opportunity to revisit the venue ruling during the jury selection process. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

Failure to Object to Use of Nonvisible Leg Restraint During Trial — Acquiescence: Security measures were addressed before Jackson's homicide trial, and the District Court concluded that use of a nonvisible leg restraint would be allowed. Jackson did not object, but following conviction Jackson contended that use of the restraint was unlawful. The Supreme Court declined to address the issue because Jackson did not object to the unobtrusive leg brace and thus failed to preserve the issue for appeal by acquiescing in any error that occurred. St. v. Jackson, 2009 MT 427, 354 M 63, 221 P3d 1213 (2009).

Failure to Timely Object to Appropriateness of Parental Treatment Plan — Waiver of Right to Object: A mother contended that certain requirements of her treatment plans were inappropriate and should not have been considered in terminating her parental rights. However, the mother was represented by counsel at all stages of the matter, including negotiation of the treatment plans, and with advice of counsel agreed to three of the four plans. By failing to object to the treatment plan requirements in a timely manner, the mother waived the argument that portions of the plans were inappropriate. The Supreme Court declined to hold the District Court in error for an action to which the mother acquiesced. In re A.A. & D.A., 2005 MT 119, 327 M 127, 112 P3d 993 (2005).

Defendant's Request for Erroneous Instruction: United States District Court found that Montana law is unclear as to absorption of the former affirmative defense of assumption of risk into the comparative negligence law but that latest Montana cases indicate assumption of risk has been abolished as an absolute defense and that it was therefore error to instruct jury on assumption of risk question. However, since defendants contended assumption of risk was absolute defense and requested the erroneous instruction, they invited the error; hence, motion for judgment notwithstanding, the verdict and motion to amend judgment must be denied. Ingram v. Dick-Char, Inc., 39 St. Rep. 96 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Waiver of Record Requirement: An attorney may waive the requirement that all interviews with the child be on the record but may not then complain that he was prejudiced by not having the interviews recorded. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Failure to Reform Deed: A purchaser who at the time of the delivery of the deed knew of the mistake and who paid the balance of the purchase price acquiesced in the mistake and could not urge the mistake as a ground for reformation. Schillinger v. Huber, 133 M 80, 320 P2d 346 (1957), followed in Goodman Realty, Inc. v. Monson, 267 M 228, 883 P2d 121, 51 St. Rep. 1074 (1994).

Failure to Reform Contract:

Acquiescence in a contract after learning that it does not represent the actual agreement destroys the right of reformation under this section. Such acquiescence may be implied from an unreasonable delay in applying for redress after notice of the mistake, the rule applying not only where reformation is asked for on the ground of mistake but also on the ground of fraud. Krueger v. Morris, 110 M 559, 107 P2d 142 (1940).

A party loses his right to reformation of a contract on the ground of mistake in its execution if he acquiesces therein after becoming aware of the mistake or circumstances such that he will be presumed to have known of it. Acquiescence may be implied from an unreasonable delay in applying for redress after notice of the mistake. Cook-Reynolds Co. v. Beyer, 107 M 1, 79 P2d 658 (1938).

Case Notes

Plaintiff Debtor Not Equitably Estopped — No Evidence Plaintiff Knew Rights Under U.C.C. — No Language in Debtor-Supplied Release Document Regarding U.C.C. Rights: Because all six elements of equitable estoppel could not be satisfied, the District Court erred in granting the defendant creditor summary judgment based on its determination that the plaintiff debtor was equitably estopped from pursuing her claims. There was no language in the release document that was prepared by the defendant to suggest that the plaintiff knew of her rights under the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) or knew that the release was an attempt to waive all of her rights under the U.C.C. Kapor v. RJC Inv., Inc., 2019 MT 41, 394 Mont. 311, 434 P.3d 869.

Failure to Disclose FELA Claim in Bankruptcy — Intent Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Judicial Estoppel: Dovey had financial difficulties that ultimately led him to file for bankruptcy. He first met with his bankruptcy attorney on June 1, 2004. At this initial meeting, Dovey filled out a worksheet listing all his debts and assets. Two weeks later, Dovey sustained severe injuries to his right knee, allegedly in the course of performing his duties as a conductor for BNSF. On October 21, 2004, Dovey filed a Chapter 7 petition for bankruptcy. In the attached forms, Dovey failed to list his potential claim against BNSF as an asset. Dovey's bankruptcy petition was discharged on February 8, 2005, and later terminated on April 3, 2006. On September 8, 2005, Dovey filed a complaint against BNSF under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA). A year later, on September 26, 2006, BNSF filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that Dovey was judicially estopped from pursuing his claim against the railroad. Since Dovey did not list his potential FELA claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy proceedings, BNSF argued, his claim against BNSF was barred by judicial estoppel. Dovey's attorney for the FELA claim stated he was unaware that Dovey had filed for bankruptcy until he read BNSF's motion. That attorney immediately contacted Dovey's bankruptcy attorney and trustee to notify them of Dovey's pending FELA lawsuit. Dovey's bankruptcy claim was reopened on October 20, 2006. In response to BNSF's summary judgment motion, Dovey claimed that he did not know that his potential FELA claim was an asset that should have been included in the settlement of his bankruptcy petition. Dovey noted that judicial estoppel is an affirmative defense that should have been raised in BNSF's answer to his complaint, not on a motion for summary judgment. BNSF subsequently brought a motion to amend its answer to assert judicial estoppel as an affirmative defense. The District Court granted BNSF's motion for summary judgment and dismissed Dovey's claims on the basis of judicial estoppel. Dovey appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Courts may invoke the equitable doctrine of judicial estoppel to prevent a party from asserting a claim that is incompatible with a position advanced by that party in a previous proceeding in which the party prevailed. The court relied on the three factors in U.S. v. Ibrahim, 522 F3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2008) to determine whether a party is judicially estopped from raising a certain claim: (1) whether a party's later position is "clearly inconsistent" with its original position; (2) whether the party has successfully persuaded the court of the earlier position; and (3) whether allowing the inconsistent position would allow the party to "derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party". Before reaching a conclusion on these three factors, the Ninth Circuit first addressed a threshold matter of whether the party intentionally sought to manipulate the courts by taking inconsistent positions. The District Court erred as a matter of law in failing to consider whether the inconsistent positions advanced by Dovey were attributable to mistake or inadvertence or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts by failing to report his FELA claim. The District Court also erred by failing to view the facts in the light most favorable to Dovey. Dovey raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether his unscheduled claim was the product of a good faith mistake or an inadvertent omission or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts. The District Court erred by granting BNSF's motion for summary judgment and by dismissing Dovey's claim. A genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Dovey's failure to list his claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy petition was intentional. The case was remanded to the District Court for further proceedings. Dovey v. BNSF Railway Co., 2008 MT 350, 346 M 305, 195 P3d 1223 (2008).

Dissolution of Limited Liability Company — Member Not Entitled to Share in Distribution of Judgment Against Member: Wallace owned about 72% of a limited liability company. A dispute arose between the company and Wallace, and the company was granted a $2.5 million judgment against Wallace. The judgment was to be used to pay current company debts and liabilities, including any owed to Wallace, and the remainder was to be distributed to remaining members in proportion to their ownership. Wallace contended that as a remaining member, he was entitled to his proportional share of the distribution. The District Court held that Wallace would not be allowed to share in the distribution, and Wallace appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Wallace was considered a remaining member for purposes of receiving payment of company debts owed to him, but considering Wallace to be a remaining member for purposes of sharing in the distribution of the punitive award against him would have allowed Wallace to profit from his own wrong, and the District Court did not err in so concluding. Wallace v. Hayes, 2008 MT 248, 344 M 523, 191 P3d 365 (2008).

Admission of Note Written by Homicide Victim Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses — Forfeiture by Wrongdoing Doctrine: Sanchez argued that admission at trial of a note written by Sanchez's admitted deliberate homicide victim violated Sanchez's right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court noted that the confrontation clause applies only to testimonial hearsay, and in this case, the note was considered testimonial because the purpose of the note was to explain the victim's untimely death or poisoning, the intended audience reasonably included law enforcement, and circumstances surrounding the note indicated that an objective declarant reasonably should have anticipated that the state would use the statement at trial. However, the U.S. Supreme Court set out an equitable exception to the confrontation clause in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), known as the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine. The doctrine states that one who obtains the absence of a witness by wrongdoing forfeits the constitutional right to confrontation. The Supreme Court agreed with the holding in U.S. v. Garcia-Meza, 403 F3d 364 (6th Cir. 2005), that a defendant whose intentional criminal act results in a victim-declarant's death benefits from the defendant's wrongdoing if the defendant can use the death to exclude the victim-declarant's otherwise admissible testimony, regardless of whether the defendant specifically intended to silence the victim. Therefore, Sanchez forfeited his right to confront the victim when he killed her and could not claim that his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated when his admittedly deliberate wrongdoing prevented the confrontation. Although the trial court admitted the note based on hearsay exceptions without addressing the confrontation clause, the court's decision was nevertheless legally correct, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the trial court's decision. St. v. Sanchez, 2008 MT 27, 341 M 240, 177 P3d 444 (2008). See also Sanchez v. St., 2012 MT 191, 366 Mont. 132, 285 P.3d 540, in which the Montana Supreme Court held that the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, 128 S. Ct. 2678 (2008), that the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine applies only when the defendant kills another person specifically to prevent the person from testifying, was not retroactive and did not apply to Sanchez's conviction, which had become final long before the Giles decision.

Contractor Entitled to Stop Work Pursuant to Developer's Breach of Contract — Contractor Improperly Required to Reimburse Postbreach Expenses: Plaintiff contractor submitted a claim for construction costs to defendant developer's architect, who approved payment, but the developer refused to pay the costs, so the contractor stopped work. The developer hired another contractor to finish the work, and the District Court penalized the contractor by requiring reimbursement of the developer's costs for finishing the work. The Supreme Court reversed the award. The contractor was entitled to stop work because of the developer's material breach of contract, and the developer was not entitled to benefit from its own wrong, so it was error to penalize the contractor for amounts expended by the developer to finish the work. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Misrepresentation of Value of Estate — Estoppel Applicable to Prevent Advantage From Misrepresentation: A conservator knew, but failed to mention, that an estate included annuities and jointly held property that was not included in the final estate inventory. Other parties, to their detriment, relied on the inventory as an accurate representation of the value of the estate. The District Court properly held that it would not be equitable for the conservator to take advantage of the misrepresentation of the value of the estate by reducing the distribution to the other parties. The Supreme Court held that the elements of equitable estoppel were met, and the District Court was affirmed. In re Estate of Stukey, 2004 MT 279, 323 M 241, 100 P3d 114 (2004). See also Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

Partner Estopped From Claiming Damages From Formation of Corporation Necessitated by Partner's Own Acts: As a result of one partner's refusal to sign documents necessary for a farm partnership to qualify for federal funding benefits, the remaining partners formed a separate business and qualified for the benefits. The abstaining partner then claimed damages because of formation of the new business and its subsequent leasing of partnership property. The District Court held that the partner was estopped from complaining about the new business, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The partner knew the history and significance of the federal benefits to the partnership and yet refused to sign the necessary documentation shortly before the deadline, which amounted to a representation or concealment of material fact, and induced the remaining partners to form the new business. The six elements of equitable estoppel as set out in Selley v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2000 MT 76, 299 M 127, 998 P2d 156 (2000), were met, and the partner was estopped from complaining that the partnership detrimentally altered its position and then denying the just and legal consequences that were caused by the partner's own conduct, act, or omission. Pankratz Farms, Inc. v. Pankratz, 2004 MT 180, 322 M 133, 95 P3d 671 (2004).

Party Estopped From Asserting That Property Placed in Trust Given Prior Denial of Interest in Property: When dividing the marital estate, the District Court found that the husband had gifted a parcel of property to the wife. Title to the property was never in the husband's name, but was always held by the husband's parents or by one of his previous wives. The husband asserted that the intent in transferring the property was to establish a trust for his benefit, with the wife as trustee. However, the husband was judicially estopped from the trust argument because he had repeatedly and unequivocally denied that he had any interest in the property in a prior lawsuit against him for past-due child support. Allowing the husband to reverse his position would have substantially altered the wife's share of the marital distribution after she helped support the husband and helped add to the value of the property. No person may take advantage of the person's own wrong, and a court of equity will not aid a person who has caused title to property to be transferred to another for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001). See also Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), in which adjudication of the husband's claim in Cowan, id., was held to have extinguished any derivative claim in the property that the husband's parents and sister may have had.

Claim of Resulting or Constructive Trust Barred by Judicial Estoppel and Clean Hands Doctrine: The parents created a family corporation and made their four children equal, sole shareholders through transfers and gifts. When two medical malpractice suits were filed against the father, he claimed that he had no right to or control over the corporation's assets. In a separate action, two sisters instituted a shareholder derivative action and petitioned for judicial review of their brother's fiduciary duties. The brother called a special meeting to issue additional stock to himself and to transfer property back to the parents, but the sisters objected and the brother was enjoined from doing so. The parents then claimed that the property was held in a resulting or constructive trust, and the District Court ordered that the assets and stock be conveyed to the parents. The sisters appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Both the sisters and the plaintiffs in the medical malpractice action relied to their detriment on the father's judicial declaration that he had no right to or control over the corporate assets, and the father was thus barred by judicial estoppel and the clean hands doctrine from raising equitable claims that a resulting or constructive trust existed. Judicial estoppel binds a party to that party's judicial declarations and precludes the party from taking a position inconsistent with the previous declaration in a subsequent action or proceeding. The clean hands doctrine provides that a party must not expect relief in equity unless the party comes into court with clean hands. The evidence here showed that the parents knowingly transferred assets to the family corporation to circumvent creditors and avoid estate taxes, and the Supreme Court will not aid a party whose claim had its inception in the party's wrongdoing, whether the victim of the wrongdoing is the other party or a third party. Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Marital Misconduct Not Factor in Equitable Distribution of Marital Assets — Portion of Husband's Retirement Funds Awarded to Wife Who Depleted Her Own Retirement in Restitution for Criminal Offense: The wife was convicted of embezzling nearly $25,000 from her employer and made restitution from her retirement account. The parties later sought a divorce, and the District Court awarded the wife one-fourth of her husband's retirement funds, plus child support and maintenance conditioned upon the wife's management of her personal finances according to the court's requirements. The husband appealed the pension distribution, citing this section for the proposition that his wife's crime and consequent restitution resulted in dissipation of the marital assets and that she should not be allowed to take advantage of her own wrong. The Supreme Court declined to apply a general maxim of jurisprudence in light of the specific provisions of 40-4-202, which preclude consideration of marital misconduct as a factor in the equitable distribution of marital property. The record showed that the husband also contributed to dissipation of the estate. The trial court conducted a thorough analysis in equity of the required statutory factors in determining how to allocate the marital estate in toto. Its findings were not clearly erroneous and were thus affirmed. In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828, 57 St. Rep. 1043 (2000).

No Extension of Statute of Repose Under Equity Principles: The omission that gave rise to Joyce's claim for legal malpractice was attorney Garnaas's failure to serve a summons within the 3-year time limit. Joyce claimed a second cause of action in Garnaas's failure to notify Joyce about the status of the case even after the underlying action was lost, arguing that the concealment of a claim is a separate tort that resets the start date for the statutes of limitations and repose. However, there was no separate claim in this case, in addition to the alleged malpractice, because that claim was subsumed within the initial malpractice. Joyce argued on appeal that the statute of repose should be extended in this case because: (1) an attorney who intentionally misleads a client regarding the true status of a case is not entitled to claim the benefit of the statute of repose because the attorney would be allowed to take advantage of his wrong, in violation of this section; or (2) equitable estoppel should bar Garnaas from taking advantage of his wrong while asserting a strict legal right, in violation of 27-2-102. In this case, however, principles of equity did not extend the otherwise absolute statute of repose. Section 27-2-102 does not apply to legal malpractice actions. Further, Joyce's allegations of continuing fraudulent concealment failed because claims for damages against Garnaas for not informing Joyce of the legal malpractice related back to the date that the summons was not served. Thus, Joyce could not claim any actual damages separate from Garnaas's original omission, which was barred by the statute of repose. Joyce v. Garnaas, 1999 MT 170, 295 M 198, 983 P2d 369, 56 St. Rep. 661 (1999). See also Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Intentional and Negligent Injuries by Joint Tortfeasor — Comparative Negligence Unaddressed When Plaintiff Fully Compensated: Boyken sued Steele for intentional injuries and Lee's Northside Bar for negligent injuries that Boyken received in a bar fight. Boyken settled with the bar for $5,000 before trial, and the jury determined Boyken's injuries in the amount of $2,500 but that Boyken was 75% responsible for those injuries. The District Court granted judgment, notwithstanding the verdict, based upon Boyken's argument that comparative negligence should not be applied when injuries also resulted from an intentional tort and awarded Boyken $2,500. The Supreme Court refused to address the issue of whether comparative negligence should be applied to an intentional tort and held that Boyken was fully compensated for his injuries and that when a joint tortfeasor settles with a claimant, the remaining joint tortfeasor is entitled to offset to the extent of the settlement. Boyken v. Steele, 256 M 419, 847 P2d 282, 50 St. Rep. 131 (1993).

Insurance Company Breaching Contract Retains Subrogation Rights: An insurance company refused to pay the plaintiff on a claim, and the plaintiff recovered his losses from other parties. The insurance company argued that any judgment against it should be reduced by the amount recovered by the plaintiff from others because the company had a subrogation right. The plaintiff contended that the insurer wrongfully refused to pay the claim and should not be allowed to benefit from the subrogation clause in the contract. The Supreme Court ruled that the other parties had no indemnity rights against the plaintiff for any payments received from the insurer. Therefore, to not allow subrogation would result in double payments to the plaintiff—a practice not favored under state law. Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936, 47 St. Rep. 82 (1990).

Late Claim Caused by Misstatement of Employer or Insurer — Equitable Estoppel Allows Claim: Affirming the legal maxim that no one can take advantage of his own wrong, the Supreme Court applied to the Occupational Disease Act of Montana (now repealed and merged with Workers' Compensation Act) the concept set out in Davis v. Jones, 203 M 464, 661 P2d 859 (1983), that when misstatements by an employer or insurer prevent a claimant from filing a claim in a timely manner or mislead the claimant into believing that no claim can or need be filed, the doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to toll the limitation period and allow filing of the claim. Mellem v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 237 M 439, 774 P2d 390, 46 St. Rep. 932 (1989), followed in Shelley v. USF&G, 252 M 106, 827 P2d 1288, 49 St. Rep. 277 (1992).

Plaintiff's Understandable Failure to Plead Pertinent Facts — No Constructive Fraud: Wife pleaded a 1965 marriage and did not mention husband's 1972 Tennessee divorce obtained while he was living in that state and his wife was living in Texas, and she did not plead a common-law marriage or mention that her husband lived in Tennessee. However, husband did not inform wife of the Tennessee divorce until almost 8 years after it occurred, when she told him she was going to sue for a Montana divorce, and it was understandable she might not believe him. When wife filed, she knew of no address for husband other than his most recent (Montana) address. She filed on August 1, and he was found and served in Tennessee on August 11. In addition, the two had lived together and held themselves out as husband and wife in Texas and Montana; therefore, a common-law marriage existed. Wife's divorce and the child support decree were not based on extrinsic, constructive fraud by wife. A court hearing a divorce action sits in equity. Given husband's acts of deceit and wife's good faith in pleading, the Supreme Court saw no reason to grant husband equitable relief by voiding wife's decree. In re Marriage of Appleton, 234 M 345, 763 P2d 658, 45 St. Rep. 1959 (1988).

No Unilateral Resumption of Contract Terms Following Breach of Contract: Once a contract has been breached, its terms may not be unilaterally resumed. The breaching party cannot claim entitlement to the contract benefits, and the nonbreaching party has no duty to perform under the contract terms. W. Media, Inc. v. Merrick, 232 M 480, 757 P2d 1308, 45 St. Rep. 1212 (1988), followed, with regard to performance under a construction contract, in James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Contracts — Defaulting Party's Right to Accounting — Contract Entire or Divisible: To determine whether or not a party defaulting on a contract is entitled to an accounting (either contractually or equitably), it must be determined first whether the contract was entire or severable. This depends very largely on contractual terms and on the intention of the parties disclosed by those terms. As a general rule, a contract is entire when by its terms, nature, and purpose it contemplates and intends that each and all of its parts are interdependent and common to one another and to the consideration. A contract contemplating the feeding of cattle by one party until 80% graded "choice", followed by sale and splitting of the proceeds with the supplier of the cattle, was held clearly intended to be entire and nonseverable. The feeder's default and abandonment completely frustrated the purpose, intent, and terms of the joint venture agreement. The feeder thereby forfeited any right it may have had to an accounting under the contract. When the joint venture was destroyed by abandonment by one of the joint venturers, equity would not compel an accounting, because a wrongdoer may not take advantage of his own wrong. Roundup Cattle Feeders v. Horpestad, 184 M 480, 603 P2d 1044 (1979), distinguishing Murphy v. Redland, 178 M 296, 583 P2d 1049 (1978).

Impossibility of Performance of Contract: A joint venture was formed, the contract contemplating the feeding of cattle by one party until 80% graded "choice", followed by sale and splitting of the proceeds with the supplier of the cattle, who was the second party. A drop in cattle prices which caused the feeder to lose his financing was not a case of commercial impossibility for two reasons. First, in order for commercial impossibility to excuse performance of a contract, the parties thereto must have had no reason to foresee the impossibility at the time they contracted. Fluctuation in cattle prices is foreseeable. Second, in order for commercial impossibility to excuse performance, the contractual duties must be impossible for anyone to perform. Subjective (personal) impossibility does not inhere to the nature of the act to be performed and does not excuse nonperformance. A loss of financing is personal impossibility. Roundup Cattle Feeders v. Horpestad, 184 M 480, 603 P2d 1044 (1979).

Partial Performance — Restitution — Damages: A joint venture was formed, the contract contemplating the feeding of cattle by one party until 80% graded "choice", followed by sale and splitting of the proceeds with the supplier of the cattle, who was the second party. When cattle prices dropped, the feeder lost his financing and defaulted on the contract. The agreement was entire and nonseverable. Having failed in the complete performance of the contract, the feeder could not recover under it. Restitution to the feeder of his expenses before default would have to be based on implied contract theory. In order for a claim of restitution to lie, there must be no willful or intentional departure from the contract, and the defects in performance must not pervade the whole or be so essential that the object which the parties intended to accomplish is not accomplished. The feeder could not recover his prior expenses because a party who has completely breached an entire, nonseverable contract, without justification or excuse, may not recover for any performance rendered prior to the breach. On the contrary, a counterclaim against the feeder for damages was upheld. Roundup Cattle Feeders v. Horpestad, 184 M 480, 603 P2d 1044 (1979), distinguishing Murphy v. Redland, 178 M 296, 583 P2d 1049 (1978).

Loss of Right of Survivorship:

Wife who feloniously killed her husband did not acquire by right of survivorship his share of property held jointly with her but took the property under a constructive trust. Sikora v. Sikora, 160 M 27, 499 P2d 808 (1972).

Where husband feloniously killed his wife, he did not acquire by right of survivorship her share of property held jointly with him but took the property under a constructive trust, and when he thereafter committed suicide his heirs had no right to wife's share. In re Cox's Estate, 141 M 583, 380 P2d 584 (1963).

Surety's Liability: This statute was one ground for holding surety liable on bond, even though bond was not in effect at time act occurred giving rise to liability, since surety company had been tardy in processing papers of party to be bonded and had accepted premium on bond. Lapke v. Hunt, 151 M 450, 443 P2d 493 (1968).

Fraud Against Spouse: The widow as administratrix of her husband's estate could not impress a trust upon property for which her deceased husband had given downpayment to his son and daughter-in-law, even though fraud was alleged on the basis that the gift was made with a parol agreement that the contract would be assigned to him as soon as he was legally separated from his wife, since to allow such claim would result in recovery on decedent's own fraud for the benefit of a stranger to the action. Platts v. Platts, 134 M 474, 334 P2d 722 (1959).

Oil and Gas Drilling Agreement: Where an oil and gas lessee was ready, able, and willing to drill further wells and develop the lessor's property, an attack upon the lessee's title by lessors will relieve the lessee of the duty either to proceed with the drilling operations or the payment of the delay rentals specified during the contest of his title. Fey v. A. A. Oil Corp., 129 M 300, 285 P2d 578 (1955).

Defaulting Contractor: A subcontractor, failing to provide all materials and perform all work necessary to complete subcontract with federal public building contractor or to pay for materials furnished subcontractor by others, with result that surety on contractor's bond completed work and paid less than contract prices for such materials, was not entitled to credit for difference between sums agreed to be paid therefor and sums actually paid by surety in action on such bond. United States ex rel. Watsabaugh & Co. v. Seaboard Co., 26 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

Fraudulent Mortgage: Where plaintiff's mortgage was valueless through defendant's misrepresentations that it was a first mortgage when in fact it was a second, and plaintiff without first foreclosing attached, it was error for court to dissolve the attachment without plaintiff's foreclosing first to prove the mortgage valueless under the requirements of 71-1-222, i.e., to exhaust the security before resorting to general assets. To so hold would be to award a prize for fraud and deceit and permit a party to take advantage of his own wrong contrary to this section. Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937).

Improper Bail: If a court did not have authority to accept Liberty bonds in lieu of money as bail, plaintiff upon whose solicitations the court accepted them, having been in pari delicto, was estopped to assert lack of authority in the court to receive them as bail since she could not take advantage of her own wrong. Kirschbaum v. Mayn, 76 M 320, 246 P 953 (1926).

Discharge of Employee: The provision of sec. 2, Ch. 11, Ex. L. 1919, that a police officer can recover salary only for services actually rendered did not apply where he was unlawfully discharged and, though offering to perform them, was thereafter prevented from so doing since the city could not take advantage of its own wrong. Sweeney v. Butte, 64 M 230, 208 P 943 (1922).

Appropriation of Property: A telegraph company cannot urge the public character of its business as a justification for its trespass when, without first resorting to eminent domain proceedings, it erects poles on and strings its wires across private property, the owner not consenting. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Nolan, 53 M 129, 162 P 169 (1916).

Attorney General's Opinions

Illegal Deeds: The Montana Subdivision and Platting Act makes contracts and deeds conveying land in violation of the act illegal. Under case and statutory law, illegal contracts are void. Case and statutory law do not declare deeds violating the act void, but since they are illegal and contracts in violation of the act are void, the deeds are also void. To hold otherwise would defeat the act's purpose and allow one to take advantage of his own wrong contrary to equity and this section. 35 A.G. Op. 65 (1974).

Laches Inapplicable to Bar Suit to Enforce Divorce Settlement Payments Fifteen Months in Arrears: A divorce settlement agreement that wife sought to enforce was a contract. It was subject to an 8-year statute of limitations. Wife filed the suit 15 months after husband stopped making payments under the agreement. Husband failed to show the extraordinary circumstances requiring application of laches that is required to dismiss a suit filed within the limitations period. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994).

Father's Conviction for Incest With Daughter Upheld — Accountability Inappropriate for Incest — Sufficient Corroborating Evidence: The defendant was convicted of incest with his 17-year-old daughter. The defendant appealed the incest conviction, arguing that his daughter was not a victim of the incest as the District Court had found, that she was legally accountable for the incest, and that as such the state was required to provide a jury instruction and evidence corroborating her testimony. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court; however, it disagreed with the District Court's reasoning that the daughter was a victim, ruling that the statutory language did not require a victim under the circumstances of the case. Ultimately, the Supreme Court found that accountability did not apply because the father and daughter were two participants in incest, that the daughter was not legally accountable for her father's incest, that the denial of the jury instruction was proper, and that the state presented sufficient evidence corroborating the daughter's testimony. St. v. Kline, 2016 MT 177, 384 Mont. 157, 376 P.3d 132.

Calculation of Restitution — No Joint and Several Liability for Restitution for 11-Day Vandalism Spree When Youth Participated Only 2 Days: A youth pleaded guilty to participating in 2 nights of an 11-day vandalism spree. The judge ordered that he was jointly and severally liable for the amount of damage caused throughout the entire spree, which exceeded $70,000. The youth argued he should be ordered to pay restitution for only the damages caused during the 2 days instead because the state did not establish his accountability for the vandalism that occurred during the other 9 days of the spree. The state argued it did not have to establish his accountability under the criminal mischief statutes for each day of the spree. The youth appealed to the Supreme Court, which agreed with the youth that the state was required to prove his accountability for the acts of others. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order of restitution and remanded for a recalculation of restitution for the 2 days on which the youth participated in the acts of vandalism. In re B.W., 2014 MT 27, 373 Mont. 409, 318 P.3d 682.

Case Notes

Competency of Executioner: One who received benefit from trustee's termination of trust could not at a later proceeding deny trustee's competence to execute termination of trust in order to prove incompetency of the same person to execute a will, which will the beneficiary was attempting to avoid. In re Estate of Powers, 163 M 67, 515 P2d 368 (1973).

Surety's Liability: This statute was one ground for holding surety liable on bond, even though bond was not in effect at time act occurred giving rise to liability, since surety company had been tardy in processing papers of party to be bonded and had accepted premium on bond. Lapke v. Hunt, 151 M 450, 443 P2d 493 (1968).

Surety Contract: Where defendant furnished contractors with surety bond providing that contractors would faithfully perform contract with State Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) for roadwork, and contract required contractors to carry public liability insurance to indemnify public for injuries sustained by reason of work on highway, defendant was liable for satisfaction of judgments notwithstanding exclusion clause under which use of automobiles was excluded from coverage of policy. The defendant assumed the burden of protecting members of the public from injury, and having accepted the benefit (premium) should also accept the burden. Doheny v. USF&G Co., 34 F. Supp. 888 (D.C. Mont. 1940), affirmed in 123 F2d 746 (9th Cir. 1941).

1-3-213. Grant includes essentials.

Easement by Grant Interpreted in Favor of Grantee — Access Provided by Initial Easement Affirmed: When Watson, in conjunction with her former husband Roger, purchased a parcel of property from defendants, Roger's parents, Watson and Roger received a permanent easement across defendants' property to access the parcel, as evidenced by defendants' representation in a loan agreement that allowed the purchase of the parcel. When Watson and Roger later divorced, Watson was granted full title to the parcel, but defendants then redefined the easement and informed Watson that only part of their property could be accessed through defendants' property, so Watson sued to enforce the terms of the initial easement. The District Court granted defendants summary judgment, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Applying general principles of contract law and interpreting the easement in favor of grantee Watson, the court noted that under this section, one who grants a thing is presumed to also grant whatever is essential to its use. Further, the granting document, written by and thus construed against defendants, contained a significant ambiguity by providing Watson and Roger a permanent easement across all of defendants' remaining lands while contradictorily limiting the easement to cover only part of defendants' property. Interpreting the document as a whole and considering the acceptable intrinsic evidence, the Supreme Court concluded that Watson was entitled to a permanent easement across defendants' remaining property as necessary and essential to the complete use and enjoyment of the landlocked parcel sold by defendants. Watson v. Dundas, 2006 MT 104, 332 M 164, 136 P3d 973 (2006), following Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221 (1999).

Sale of Lot Presumptively Including Access: It is a presumption, albeit disputable, that the complete use and enjoyment of a parcel of land includes access to that parcel. To overcome the presumption, the seller must offer evidence or some legal basis that would controvert the buyer's reliance on the presumption. Here, the Kester's sold the Erkers a house in Big Sky for approximately $310,000. The Kesters' attorney later discovered through the title company that a portion of the driveway, which provided sole access to the house, had not been conveyed by the deed to the lot and requested additional money for the deed to the driveway. There was no indication at the time of sale that any parcel was separate and distinct from the lot, nor did the Kesters reveal any intention to reserve the driveway from the purchase of the lot. Although the Erkers were charged with constructive notice of the contents of properly recorded instruments describing prior conveyances of the property, under Montana subdivision laws, the driveway was not an individual parcel of land at the time of purchase, so the Erkers could be charged only with knowledge that the purchase of the lot described in the common metes and bounds description included the driveway. Absent evidence to the contrary, the Erkers were entitled to the presumption that purchase of the lot included access to it and to summary judgment as a matter of law. Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221, 56 St. Rep. 912 (1999), following Yellowstone Valley Co. v. Assoc. Mtg. Investors, Inc., 88 M 73, 290 P 255 (1930).

1-3-214. Wrong — remedy.

Demand for Performance of Term Not Contained in Contract — Statement That Party Will Not Perform Unless Demand Met — Anticipatory Breach of Contract: "A party acts at his peril if, insisting on what he mistakenly believes to be his rights, he refuses to perform his duty." Therefore, a demand for performance of a term not contained in the parties' contract, accompanied by an unequivocal statement that the demanding party will not perform unless the additional term is met, constitutes an anticipatory breach of the contract, excusing performance by the other party. In determining whether an anticipatory breach was committed, the concern is whether the promisor communicated an unequivocal indication of an intent not to perform rather than the promisor's uncommunicated subjective intent in repudiating its contractual obligations. A promisee need not jeopardize its own interests by speculating about the promisor's clear refusal to perform or by waiting until the time set for performance to ascertain whether the promisor's unequivocal repudiation was serious. Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237, 53 St. Rep. 593 (1996), following United Calif. Bank v. Prudential Ins. Co, 681 P2d 390 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1983), and followed in Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001). See also Comment d, Restatement (Second) of Contracts 250 (1981).

Principles of Equity as Limitation of Freedom to Contract Retroactively: For equitable reasons, the lower court refused to enforce an agreement by some of the investors in a real estate project to retroactively treat certain contributions as loans accruing interest. The Supreme Court agreed, noting that not all investors had been part of the agreement and that the result of the agreement would be devastating to some of the parties. World Realty Ltd. v. Goulding, 245 M 188, 800 P2d 161, 47 St. Rep. 1974 (1990).

Legislative Power to Alter Common Law: No one has a vested interest in any rule of common law. The Legislature may alter common-law causes of action to promote legitimate state interests and may alter or abrogate causes of action sounding in tort. Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989).

Case of First Impression — Breach of Contract by Anticipatory Repudiation: Combining two maxims of jurisprudence, "The law neither does nor requires idle acts", and "For every wrong there is a remedy", court found no reason in policy or in law for denying an immediate action for damages based on breach of contract by anticipatory repudiation. However, court held for defendant, as language asserted by plaintiff as a repudiation was subject to different interpretations; and since breach of contract by anticipatory repudiation works harsh results, for its application, there must be a positive unequivocal statement to the promisee indicating that the promisor will not or cannot substantially perform his contractual duties before his time for performance has arrived. STC, Inc. v. Billings, 168 M 364, 543 P2d 374 (1975).

Inducing Withdrawal of Bail Bond: Complaint in an action for damages based upon acts of defendants in wrongfully and by false representations persuading bondsmen on a bail bond furnished by plaintiff charged with crime to withdraw therefrom, with the result that plaintiff was kept in jail for 38 days and until a new bond was furnished by some of the persons who had previously withdrawn on the solicitation of defendants, was held to state a cause of action, irrespective of the form or nature of the action, upon the theory that for every wrong there is a remedy. Pyles v. Melvin, 84 M 338, 275 P 753 (1929).

1-3-215. Equal in right or wrong.

Case Notes

Unlawful Conduct Not Necessarily Bar to Negligence Action: Plaintiff and defendant were illegally hunting coyotes from defendant's airplane without a proper permit when the plane crashed. The pari delicto doctrine, found in 1-3-215, does not bar plaintiff's negligence action against the defendant as pilot. Conduct prohibited by law that is not strongly condemned by public policy as a matter of serious criminal conduct or delinquency may not be sufficient to bar recovery. The hunting statute in issue is not of a type involving conduct of which the law so strongly disapproves as a matter of public policy that access to the courts should be denied for tort purposes. In light of this holding, the court overrules two prior Montana cases that relied on the pari delicto doctrine to bar lawsuits. The two are Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913), and Jackson v. Lomas, 60 M 8, 198 P 434 (1921). Waller v. Engelke, 227 M 470, 741 P2d 385, 44 St. Rep. 1241 (1987). However, see Patten v. Raddatz, 271 M 276, 895 P2d 633, 52 St. Rep. 439 (1995), in which the court applied the doctrine of in pari delicto to bar recovery when prostitution and drug consumption constituted the primary purpose of the contract.

Injured Party in Pari Delicto: A city ordinance prohibited the sale as well as the discharge of fireworks within the city limits. A minor purchased a package of fireworks from defendant, discharged one, and was injured. Having been in pari delicto with defendant in violating the ordinance, he could not recover damages for the injuries sustained. The rule that the violation of a penal statute or ordinance by one resulting in injury to another is negligence per se does not apply where the wrongdoer and the injured party are in pari delicto. Jackson v. Lomas, 60 M 8, 198 P 434 (1921), overruled in Waller v. Engelke, 227 M 470, 741 P2d 385, 44 St. Rep. 1241 (1987), which held that the pari delicto doctrine, found in 1-3-215, does not necessarily bar a plaintiff's negligence action against a defendant because the plaintiff himself violated a statute. Walier held that conduct prohibited by law that is not strongly condemned by public policy as a matter of serious criminal conduct or delinquency may not be sufficient to bar recovery.

Competing Petitions for Adoption: The court did not abuse its discretion by delaying determination of a jurisdictionally perfected adoption petition ready for hearing to consider subsequent petitions since the court cannot be compelled to fragment the case because of different filings and readiness for hearing of competing petitions. Father's Conviction for Incest With Daughter Upheld — Accountability Inappropriate for Incest — Sufficient Corroborating Evidence: The defendant was convicted of incest with his 17-year-old daughter. The defendant appealed the incest conviction, arguing that his daughter was not a victim of the incest as the District Court had found, that she was legally accountable for the incest, and that as such the state was required to provide a jury instruction and evidence corroborating her testimony. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court; however, it disagreed with the District Court's reasoning that the daughter was a victim, ruling that the statutory language did not require a victim under the circumstances of the case. Ultimately, the Supreme Court found that accountability did not apply because the father and daughter were two participants in incest, that the daughter was not legally accountable for her father's incest, that the denial of the jury instruction was proper, and that the state presented sufficient evidence corroborating the daughter's testimony. Calculation of Restitution — No Joint and Several Liability for Restitution for 11-Day Vandalism Spree When Youth Participated Only 2 Days: A youth pleaded guilty to participating in 2 nights of an 11-day vandalism spree. The judge ordered that he was jointly and severally liable for the amount of damage caused throughout the entire spree, which exceeded $70,000. The youth argued he should be ordered to pay restitution for only the damages caused during the 2 days instead because the state did not establish his accountability for the vandalism that occurred during the other 9 days of the spree. The state argued it did not have to establish his accountability under the criminal mischief statutes for each day of the spree. The youth appealed to the Supreme Court, which agreed with the youth that the state was required to prove his accountability for the acts of others. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order of restitution and remanded for a recalculation of restitution for the 2 days on which the youth participated in the acts of vandalism. Construction of Road on Easement — Three-Year Delay in Landowner Bringing Claims Against Easement Holder — Laches Properly Applied: The plaintiff brought negligence, trespass, and other claims, and filed a notice of lis pendens against his neighbors after they had completed construction of a road that ran along their easement across the plaintiff's land. The District Court granted summary judgment to the neighbors, ruling that the claims were barred by laches. The plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. The court affirmed, agreeing that the equitable doctrine of laches applied because the plaintiff had known that the neighbors were constructing a road that destroyed his access trail and did not inform them until 3 years after the road had been completed at great expense to them. The court also emphasized that the neighbors had been significantly prejudiced by the plaintiff's delay in filing a notice of lis pendens until the week before the sale of their property was scheduled to close. Algee v. Hren, 2016 MT 166, 384 Mont. 93, 375 P.3d 386.

Statute of Limitations Not Expired — Laches Properly Applied: The plaintiff brought claims of negligence, trespass, and other claims, and filed a notice of lis pendens against his neighbors after they had completed construction of a road that ran along their easement across the plaintiff's land. The District Court granted summary judgment to the neighbors, ruling that the claims were barred by laches even though the statute of limitations had not expired on all of the claims. The plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. The court agreed that the equitable doctrine of laches applied even to claims on which the statute of limitations had not expired given that the plaintiff's delay in filing the claims had significantly prejudiced the defendants. Algee v. Hren, 2016 MT 166, 384 Mont. 93, 375 P.3d 386.

Application of Laches — Statute Not Yet Tolled: The defendants argued that laches barred an action for damages brought 5 years after a breach of a contract concerning the sale of their business interests to the plaintiff, but they failed to submit evidence showing extraordinary circumstances or prejudice sufficient to justify the application of laches when the statute of limitations had not yet tolled. Although the business at issue was worth substantially less at the time of the action's filing than it was at the time of the breach of contract, the evidence did not show that the delay in filing changed the nature of the damages, other than the potential amount of interest due. Bottrell Family Investments Ltd. Partnership v. Diversified Financial, Inc., 2015 MT 185, 379 Mont. 504, 352 P.3d 620.

Probate Not Barred by Laches — Contestants Unaware of Will's Existence: Laches did not bar the probating of a 1997 will because the individuals contesting the probate were not aware of the existence of the will until the estate's personal representative initiated informal probate proceedings 14 years after the testator's death. However, laches would have barred an earlier will benefiting the contestants because at least one contestant was aware of the will's existence and did not seek to probate it for 14 years. In re Estate of Harris, 2015 MT 182, 379 Mont. 474, 352 P.3d 20.

Detrimental Reliance on Failure to Enforce Covenants — Laches Applied: A property owner sued his neighbor for violating restrictive covenants after the neighbor built two fences on his property and extended a deck on his home to reach as far as the eaves of his home. A surveyor testified that the eaves of the home, as well as the newly extended deck, extended 2 feet beyond the 90-foot setback covenant. The District Court concluded that the fences did not violate the restrictive covenants but ordered that the deck addition be removed. Both parties appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the fences did not violate the covenants. With regard to the deck, the Supreme Court determined that the defendant neighbor had detrimentally relied on the belief that the eaves of his home did not violate the covenants and that he could therefore extend the deck to the same distance as the eaves. Because the plaintiffs had never challenged the eaves on the neighbor's home as a violation of the restrictive covenants, the doctrine of laches applied, and the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's order for the removal of the deck extension. Wagner v. Woodward, 2012 MT 19, 363 Mont. 403, 270 P.3d 21.

Lack of Diligence and Prejudice Required to Assert Laches: In 1949, plaintiffs' predecessor in interest granted an easement to defendant's predecessor in interest to allow the construction of radio towers on a portion of a 160-acre parcel, conditioned on location and maintenance of the property. Defendant subsequently notified plaintiffs that he intended to expand the radio facilities beyond the original construction site. Plaintiffs sued, asserting that the expansion would encompass property not included in the original grant and contending that defendant had neglected to maintain the property. Defendant asserted the defense of laches on grounds that plaintiffs unreasonably delayed in asserting their claims. The District Court rejected the laches defense, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. For laches to apply, a court must find lack of diligence by the party against whom the defense is asserted and prejudice to the party asserting the defense. In this case, defendant made no showing of prejudice as a result of the allegedly unreasonable delay, and the laches defense was correctly rejected. Anderson v. Stokes, 2007 MT 166, 338 M 118, 163 P3d 1273 (2007).

Challenge to Term Limits Barred by Doctrine of Laches: Constitutional Initiative No. 64, which in 1992 enacted term limits for various elective offices, was challenged in 2002 on several grounds by two state senators whose terms were affected by the limits. The Supreme Court did not address the merits of the claims because it held that they were barred by the doctrine of laches. Laches is a concept of equity that can apply when a person is negligent in asserting a right, and exists when there has been an unexplainable delay of such duration or character as to render the enforcement of an asserted right inequitable. Laches is appropriate when a party is actually or presumptively aware of the party's rights, but fails to act. In order to apply laches, a showing must be made that the passage of time has prejudiced the party asserting laches or has rendered the enforcement of a right inequitable. To allow plaintiffs' challenge 9 years after the enactment of the initiative would prejudice those who relied on its presumptive validity, and raise a question of the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced. The court noted that voters still retain the right to repeal the term limits provision, by initiative or through legislative referendum, but that the point had been reached at which a claim asserting that voters failed to follow the proper procedures in enacting the constitutional initiative was simply too late. Cole v. State ex rel. Brown, 2002 MT 32, 308 M 265, 42 P3d 760 (2002), followed in Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442, in which the Supreme Court concluded that filing a lawsuit challenging a referendum 4 days after the referendum passed did not warrant dismissal based on laches when no demonstration of prejudice or inequity was made, aside from the ordinary cost of the election process.

Motion to Amend Petition for Dissolution Properly Denied When Basis for Petition Known for Twenty-One Months: Citing this maxim of jurisprudence, the Supreme Court upheld a District Court's refusal to allow amendment of a petition for dissolution to include spousal maintenance when the petitioner knew the facts upon which her motion was based 21 months before trial but made the motion to amend only 1 month before trial and offered no explanation for the delay. Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000).

Failure to Submit Available Evidence Precluding Setting Aside of Judgment: At a 1995 hearing on child support, a father was defiantly uncooperative in providing documentation of any kind regarding his finances, assets, the provision of insurance for the children, and past child support payments. At a 1998 hearing on suspension of his driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses, he claimed that he should be allowed to present the evidence that he refused to provide earlier. The District Court declined to reopen the 1995 hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed. If there was anything that prevented the father from a fair submission of the controversy, it was his own defiance of the justice system. His failure to avail himself of the opportunity to present the appropriate information in 1995 and his desire to retroactively argue a factual issue in the case were not sufficient reasons to justify setting aside the judgment. His motion for a new trial was properly denied, and in the interests of finality of litigation, the Supreme Court declined to upset the judgment. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996).

Laches:

Laches is a concept of equity that can apply when a person is negligent in asserting a right. Laches can apply when there has been an unexplained delay of such duration or character as to render enforcement of the asserted rights inequitable. Each case must be determined on its own unique facts. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994), following Fillner v. Richland, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537 (1991). See also Kelleher v. Bd. of Social Work Examiners & Professional Counselors, 283 M 188, 939 P2d 1003, 54 St. Rep. 556 (1997) (holding that laches did not apply when the Board knew that applicant had a pending statutory right to attorney fees despite a delay in asserting the right).

Laches exists when there is unexplained delay of such duration or character as to render the enforcement of the asserted claim inequitable. Jackson v. St., 181 M 257, 593 P2d 432 (1979).

Laches is an equitable defense, meaning negligence in the assertion of a right. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

Ignorance of Law Not Loss of Opportunity to Defend: Ignorance of the law is not an argument for the lack of opportunity to defend. NW. Farm Credit Serv., ACA v. Lund, 255 M 114, 841 P2d 490, 49 St. Rep. 910 (1992).

Claim for Past Salary Barred by Laches: The plaintiff initiated a claim for sums due for conversion compensation brought about by a change of contract entered into by the plaintiff and a university 17 years prior to the suit. The Supreme Court ruled that the claim was barred by the equitable doctrine of laches due to an unexplained delay in bringing the suit that was of such duration or character as to render the enforcement of the asserted right inequitable. Sperry v. Mont. St. Univ., 239 M 25, 778 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1482 (1989).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Jury Instructions — Equity Issues in Discretion of District Court: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The District Court refused the instructions, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of equitable issues rests solely within the discretion of the District Court. Equity aids the vigilant. The plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988). See also Turner v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2012 MT 213, 366 Mont. 285, 291 P.3d 1082 (no equity when the plaintiffs failed to conduct a title search upon purchase of property from a family member).

Failure to Ascertain Property Status for Nearly Forty Years — Laches Applicable: The trial court properly applied laches in a quiet title case where appellants "slept on their rights by not ascertaining the status of their property for nearly 40 years", then claimed the warranty deed had been materially altered to deprive them of their mineral rights. Absence from the state was not an excuse for sleeping on their rights. Benson v. Diehl, 228 M 199, 745 P2d 315, 44 St. Rep. 1455 (1987).

Failure to Assert Royalty Interest in Tax Deed Land — Laches:

A tax deed issued to the county in 1930 without affidavits setting forth the statutorily requisite statements as to notice to the owner and as to occupancy was void. The county sold the land to A.O., reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiff children of the original owner who had lost the land for failure to pay taxes quitclaimed all their interest in the land to A.O.'s successors, reserving their claim to and interest in the 6¼% royalty claimed by the county, and in turn A.O.'s successors conveyed to plaintiffs all of the successors' interest in that royalty. Plaintiffs' conveyance cleared the title of any insufficiency in the tax deed proceedings but did not convey or give up plaintiffs' claim to the 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiffs' redemption argument failed because they had never attempted a redemption. After analyzing nine factors relating to laches, the court ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim to the county's royalty interest. Richardson v. Richland County, 219 M 48, 711 P2d 777, 42 St. Rep. 1834 (1985), followed in Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991). (The court also stated that King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981), in which the court concluded that laches was inapplicable because laches did not commence until oil was produced and royalties earned, was incomplete in its laches analysis because the court overlooked the inchoate ownership of the royalty interest.)

County's tax deed was void for insufficient notice of the tax sale and failure to give notice of application for a tax deed to the owners of the property. The county had deeded the land to Swigart, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Swigart, using a statutory proceeding, applied for and received a deed confirming the tax deed. The confirmation deed did not mention the county's 6¼% royalty interest. The confirmation deed was void for failure to give sufficient notice to the owners who had lost the land to the county or to their successors in interest. The two original owners had each had an undivided one-half interest in the land. Plaintiff heirs of one of the original owners sued to quiet title to the county's 6¼% royalty interest and then quitclaimed to Swigart's heirs all plaintiffs' interest in the land, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. In return, Swigart's heirs quitclaimed the 6¼% royalty interest to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' quitclaim to Swigart's heirs did not convey or give up any claim plaintiffs had to or any interest they had in the 6¼% royalty interest. The court analyzed 10 factors relating to laches and ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim and that the 6¼% royalty interest was vested in the county. Anderson v. Richland County, 219 M 60, 711 P2d 784, 42 St. Rep. 1843 (1985).

Laches — Elements — Questioning One's Right to Real Property: The length of time during which rights are not asserted is not the only factor to be considered in determining whether laches applies. There must be negligence in asserting a right and an unexplained delay that would render enforcement of the asserted right inequitable. Plaintiff here did not have to seek judicial determination of her right to a one-half mineral interest in land until that right was questioned. There was no harm to defendants as they were unaware of their possible claim to the one-half interest until lessee of plaintiff's interest raised a title question. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Suit for Exclusive Ownership of Joint Savings Account Funds: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts. Three years later the mother made a written demand upon her son for the return of the passbooks and 1 month following the demand filed a lawsuit to establish her exclusive ownership of the funds in the accounts. The doctrine of laches was inapplicable as the mother was not negligent in prosecuting her claim, having waited less than 1 month after her written demand to file suit. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Objection to Termination of Trust Barred by Laches: Where 4 years after his appointment as trustee appellant objected to the termination of a trust on the grounds that the decree of distribution made 32 years earlier was based on fraud and offered no reasonable explanation for his failure to earlier file an objection, the appellant would be barred by laches from objecting to the petition for termination of the trust. Estate of Wallace v. McAlear, 186 M 18, 606 P2d 136 (1980).

Untimely Motion: When motion to intervene was made for the first time at the beginning of trial after intervenor sat on his claimed right for 2½ years, the judge correctly denied the motion on the basis of untimeliness. Archer v. LaMarch Creek Ranch, 174 M 429, 571 P2d 379 (1977).

Mining Claims:

A person claiming an interest in property must be diligent in asserting his claim, and this is especially true as to mining claims. A stockholder's action for cancellation of mining lease allegedly procured through secret collusion between corporate lessor's confidential agent and lessee and other defendants was barred by "laches", where plaintiff failed to make due inquiry, permitted lessee to expend large sums, accepted benefits of lease, ratified it twice, and delayed 2 years after collusion should have been discovered before bringing action. Jeffrey v. Pioneer Placer Dredging Co., 50 F. Supp. 43 (D.C. Mont. 1943).

The rule of laches is most rigidly applied in cases involving mining claims for the reason that no other class of property is subject to more violent fluctuations in value. O'Hanlon v. Ruby Gulch Min. Co., 64 M 318, 209 P 1062 (1922).

Default Judgment: Where defendant in a mortgage foreclosure suit, who had been regularly served in person with summons, permitted 2 years to elapse after entry of judgment by default against him and 8 months after execution of the Sheriff's deed to the property before moving to set it aside on the ground that the judgment, having been entered 1 day too soon, was void, he was not entitled to relief by Writ of Certiorari. Under such circumstances the judgment will be presumed to have been entered within jurisdiction. State ex rel. Matt v. District Court, 86 M 193, 282 P 1042 (1929).

Foreclosure Decree: Plaintiff who did nothing toward having a decree of foreclosure amended for a period of more than 6 months and whose action was not filed for more than a year after foreclosure sale was not entitled to relief. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Gallatin County, 84 M 98, 274 P 288 (1929).

Adverse Claim to Property:

Where a claimant of land permitted 30 years to elapse before he seriously attempted to enforce his claim, and during that time the value of the land had increased more than a hundredfold, and innocent third parties without notice of his claim had purchased portions thereof and expended time and money in their improvement, he was guilty of such laches in prosecuting his alleged right as to make this maxim applicable. Kimes v. N. Pac. Ry., 49 M 573, 144 P 156 (1914).

The maxim enunciated in this section was applied in a case where the plaintiff, knowing of the defendant's adverse claim to the property in controversy, remained silent for 12 years and offered no explanation for the delay in bringing suit. Kavanaugh v. Flavin, 35 M 133, 88 P 764 (1907).

1-3-219. Form and substance.

Case Notes

Error in Placing Factual Allegations in Supporting Memorandum — Amendment of Petition for Postconviction Relief to Be Freely Given: Nava inadvertently placed his recitation of facts supporting his petition for postconviction relief (PCR) in his supporting memorandum rather that in his PCR petition. The Supreme Court held that leave to amend his PCR petition should be freely granted by the District Court and that to not do so was an elevation of form over substance. Nava v. St., 2011 MT 77, 360 Mont. 96, 255 P.3d 53.

Members of County Commission Also Members of Zoning Commission — Zoning Regulations Properly Adopted: Plaintiffs contended that: (1) zoning regulations were not properly adopted because the Yellowstone Board of County Commissioners did not create a development pattern and the regulations themselves did not create a development pattern; (2) it was inappropriate for a development pattern and regulations to be promulgated together; (3) the zoning commission did not submit draft regulations to the Board; and (4) the Board itself did not vote to adopt the regulations. The District Court held that the Board substantially complied with statute in adopting the regulations, and the Supreme Court concurred. The zoning commission, not the Board, is charged with creating and adopting a development pattern, and nothing in law proscribes the creation of a development plan and zoning regulations simultaneously. The proposed regulations were properly submitted to the Board for consideration and public hearing. In this case, the County Commissioners were also members of the zoning commission, and although the members did not clearly state in what capacity they were voting when they adopted the regulations, the court found it difficult to imagine that the members would not have voted similarly in either capacity. To avoid confusion, the court recommended that members in similar positions make clear in what capacity they are voting and sign appropriately. Yurczyk v. Yellowstone County, 2004 MT 3, 319 M 169, 83 P3d 266 (2004).

Sufficiency of Single Petition to Transfer Territory From One K-12 District to Another K-12 District: Residents of Upper Nine Mile Valley petitioned the Missoula County School Superintendent to be transferred from Alberton K-12 district to Frenchtown K-12 district. The superintendent determined that the petition was valid and scheduled a hearing, but prior to the hearing, the Alberton Board of Trustees requested that the hearing be canceled because two separate petitions were not filed—one for elementary students and one for high school students. The superintendent denied the request, and on appeal to District Court, summary judgment was granted in favor of the superintendent. The Alberton Board of Trustees then appealed to the Supreme Court, asserting that two petitions were required under either 20-6-213 or 20-6-320 (both now repealed) in order to transfer both elementary and high school territories from one K-12 district to another K-12 district. Conversely, the superintendent maintained that because the request was for the transfer of combined elementary and high school territory from one K-12 district, as defined in 20-6-701, to another, only one petition was necessary. In order to give meaning to all the applicable statutes, the Supreme Court concluded that a K-12 school district is a high school district upon which an elementary district has been attached and remains a high school district for purposes of the governing statutes. Therefore, 20-6-320 (now repealed) applied to the petition in question because it concerned transfer of territory from one high school district to another. The question then became not whether a formal, second petition was required to address the elementary district, but whether under 20-6-320(8) (now repealed) the petition in question was "accompanied" by an elementary "petition" that satisfied the corollary requirements of 20-6-213 (now repealed). The Alberton trustees argued that a distinct, second elementary petition, also signed by a majority of registered electors, was required or else the entire transfer process was invalid. The Supreme Court refused to abide by such a strict, formalistic approach, noting that the law respects form less than substance. The petition clearly identified that the territory was K-12, meaning that any attached elementary territory would also be transferred, thus the petition to transfer high school territory was unquestionably "accompanied" by a petition to transfer elementary territory as well, and it was not fatal that both petitions appeared on a single sheet of paper. The court held that it would be unreasonable and far too formalistic to require that two separate petitions be submitted when one petition, clearly identifying the intent to transfer both high school and elementary territory, served the same function. The District Court was affirmed. McKirdy v. Vielleux, 2000 MT 264, 302 M 18, 19 P3d 207, 57 St. Rep. 1101 (2000).

Good Will Exception Applicable to Stock Sale as Well as Asset Sale: Roessmans purchased 100% of the stock in a construction company, which constituted a complete transfer and conveyance of all of Laabses' right, title, and interest in the company. The sale agreement contained a covenant not to compete, restricting Laabses from performing any construction in the area for 7 years, including construction for any prior, existing, or referred clients of the company. About 4 years later, Roessmans filed a complaint alleging that Laabses had repeatedly breached the covenant not to compete by continuing construction in the area and performing projects for prior clients. Laabses moved for summary judgment on grounds that the covenant was void because it violated public policy against restraint of trade, contending that the exception in 28-2-704 did not apply because the sale in question was a sale of stock rather than a sale of assets. Laabses asserted that shareholders do not own the good will of a business, which belongs to the corporation, and that when shares of stock are bought and sold by individuals, the good will itself is not transferred. The Supreme Court found that such an interpretation would exalt form over substance. In this context, the stock purchase agreement specifically contemplated the transfer of good will and there was no substantive difference between sale of the company stock and sale of the company's assets, so the good will exception applied to the stock sale as well as the asset sale. Snow Country Constr., Inc. v. Laabs, 1999 MT 279, 296 M 520, 989 P2d 847, 56 St. Rep. 1125 (1999). See also Earthworks, Inc. v. Sehn, 553 NW 2d 490 (N. Dak. 1996).

2007 Amendment: Chapter 61 made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

Case Notes

Fraudulently Induced Release: Where vendee of an elevator bought under a contract permitting him to pay for it out of the profits derived in operating it had in that manner fully paid for it on a certain day, but in reliance upon the correctness of an erroneous audit of his books by the vendor, about a month thereafter executed a surrender of his rights, a court of equity will, on the theory that that was done which ought to have been done, decree that legal title vested in him when full payment was made, and defendant vendor may not be heard to say in defense that plaintiff had relinquished his rights which then had become fixed, but of which he was kept in ignorance by the vendor's acts. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., Inc., 90 M 461, 5 P2d 210 (1931).

Execution of Deed: Where a vendor executes a deed to an interest in oil land and receives an adequate consideration therefor, he may not come into a court of equity to evade his obligation on the ground that the instrument was so drawn that, tested by the technical rules of law, it does not convey what was intended to be conveyed. The court will consider that as done which should have been done and sustain the transaction if, on sound rules of law and equity, effect can be given to all the provisions of the deed and the intention of the parties carried out. Krutzfeld v. Stevenson, 86 M 463, 284 P 553 (1930).

Parties to Obligation: The equitable doctrine that that which ought to have been done must be regarded as done does not operate in favor of every person but only in favor of the one who holds the equitable right to have the act performed, as against the one upon whom the duty of such performance has devolved. Morton v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 80 M 593, 261 P 278 (1927).

Delivery of Lease: Where an oil and gas lease had been placed in escrow and all conditions precedent to delivery had been complied with, it will be considered to have been delivered under the doctrine that that which ought to have been done will be regarded as having been done. Guerin v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 68 M 365, 218 P 949 (1923).

1-3-222. Impossibilities.

What Constitutes Impossibility: Appealing in a breach of contract case, the seller asserted a defense of impossibility attributable to harsh weather conditions at the time set for delivery. The trial court apparently found the seller did not intend to deliver until after January 1 in any case. Such a finding was supported by the following facts: the seller had been telling the buyer for some time that no delivery could be made until after January 1; the seller had been intimating an unwillingness or inability to comply with the contract for months; and the seller, in order to wean the calves for the agreed 45-day period before delivery, would have had to start weaning by October 31 in order to deliver by December 15, the extended delivery date. (The contract had called for a mid-November delivery.) October 31 was 9 days before the snow that allegedly created impossibility of performance because of an inability to round up the calves. The Supreme Court found there was adequate evidence to support the trial court's rejection of this defense. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Substantial Compliance: Where farm contract required party in possession to summer-fallow 80 acres and court found he had summer-fallowed 74.5 acres and that was all the tillable land available, this constituted substantial and sufficient performance since the law never requires impossibilities. Letz v. Lampen, 110 M 477, 104 P2d 4 (1940).

Tender of Performance Dispensed With: Since the law does not require impossibilities or the doing of idle acts, where a school board by filling the position for which it had employed plaintiff had put it out of its power to place her, all other positions being filled, did not hold any meeting at which plaintiff could have presented herself for duty, and the superintendent had advised her that the board had repudiated its contract with her, she was not required to tender her services to the board or the superintendent, within the meaning of the instruction above, to entitle her to recover. Le Clair v. School District, 74 M 385, 240 P 391 (1925).

Return of Consideration on Disaffirmance by Minor: Where from the very nature or character of a consideration received by a minor for the execution of a contract (services performed by attorneys under a contract of employment to institute an action) it cannot be returned by him as required by 41-1-304, as a condition precedent to disaffirmance, he may disaffirm though unable to make return. Downey v. N. Pac. Ry., 72 M 166, 232 P 531 (1924).

1-3-223. Idle acts.

Case Notes

Disposition of Counterclaim by Separate Proceeding as Idle Act: Defendants argued that because a bad faith counterclaim was not before the District Court at the time of a summary judgment hearing on whether insurance coverage existed, it was improperly dismissed. However, the court properly decided that because there was no coverage under the insurance policies, the counterclaim was without merit. To compel the court to dispose of the bad faith counterclaim in a separate independent proceeding would be to compel an inefficient and idle act. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Waller, 252 M 328, 828 P2d 1384, 49 St. Rep. 318 (1992).

Exception to Procedural Requirements of Tax Break Statute: Plaintiff, at hearing by the State Tax Appeal Board, was denied tax benefits under the Montana Economic Land Development Act (MELDA), specifically under section 84-7526, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which created an exception to the local implementation requirement. The trial court found for plaintiff. In affirming, the Supreme Court found a clear purpose for MELDA and held that if the Legislature did not intend for there to be an exception to the procedural requirements of the Act, it would not have adopted language creating an exception because the Legislature does not perform useless acts. An interpretation that gives effect is always preferred over an interpretation that makes a statute void or treats the statute as mere surplusage. The decision of the Board did not reconcile the provisions of MELDA in such a manner as to honor the legislative purpose behind it. Am. Linen Supply v. Dept. of Revenue, 189 M 542, 617 P2d 131, 37 St. Rep. 1707 (1980), followed in Corwin v. Bd. of Pub. Educ., 272 M 14, 898 P2d 1227, 52 St. Rep. 589 (1995).

Perfection of Appeal — Motion to Amend Findings Not Required: When a party's trial memorandum indicated that the opposing party's proposed findings were insufficient in two regards, the failure to move for amendment of the trial court's findings in that regard is not fatal to an appeal raising the same issue. Metcalf v. Metcalf, 183 M 266, 598 P2d 1140 (1979).

Case of First Impression — Breach of Contract by Anticipatory Repudiation: Combining two maxims of jurisprudence, "The law neither does nor requires idle acts", and "For every wrong there is a remedy", court found no reason in policy or in law for denying an immediate action for damages based on breach of contract by anticipatory repudiation. However, court held for defendant, as language asserted by plaintiff as a repudiation was subject to different interpretations; and since breach of contract by anticipatory repudiation works harsh results, for its application, there must be a positive unequivocal statement to the promisee indicating that the promisor will not or cannot substantially perform his contractual duties before his time for performance has arrived. STC, Inc. v. Billings, 168 M 364, 543 P2d 374 (1975).

Contract of Purchase: Where purchaser conditioned annual payment on performance of certain acts by vendor contained in contract and subsequently brought suit for breach of contract when vendor did not perform such acts, trial court properly entered judgment for vendor on evidence that purchaser, prior to payment, was going to insist on performance by vendor of other acts not contained in contract, since performance of acts specified in contract would have been idle, and under this section law does not require performance of idle acts. Quayle v. Counts, 155 M 57, 466 P2d 911 (1970).

Demand on Trustee: While a demand is ordinarily required as a condition precedent to a suit by a cestui que trust against a trustee, no demand is necessary when it would be of no avail. Poepping v. Monson, 138 M 38, 353 P2d 325 (1960).

Transcript Where No Right to Appeal: Where person convicted in District Court petitioned Supreme Court for Writ of Mandate to compel District Court to furnish "copy of trial and court record transcript" for purpose of appeal in forma pauperis, but no notice of appeal had been filed as required by statute and time for appeal had elapsed, Writ would be denied. State ex rel. Treat v. District Court, 124 M 234, 221 P2d 436 (1950).

Clearing Title of Void Claim: Where a decree of distribution of an estate was entered and no appeal was taken from such decree, an affidavit thereafter filed and recorded, stating that the affiant was an heir and devisee of the will and claiming an interest in the real estate distributed, was void on its face and no suit to quiet title was necessary to convey clear title. Hart v. Barron, 122 M 350, 204 P2d 797 (1949).

Useless Gas Drilling: Where plaintiffs sought to cancel gas lease for failure to market the product and for failure to drill offset wells but there was no market for the gas produced, the drilling of such wells would have been a useless act and failure to do so might not be considered a breach of the contract. Severson v. Barstow, 103 M 526, 63 P2d 1022 (1937).

Tender of Performance Under Repudiated Contract:

Defendant, a defaulting purchaser of realty at execution sale, in an action by the Sheriff brought under 25-13-705 to recover the difference in the amount of defendant's bid and the amount which the officer received on resale, was not in a position to rely on the Sheriff's failure to tender him a certificate of sale where he had stated that he would not have paid the amount of his bid even if a certificate had been tendered, thus showing that tender would have been an idle ceremony not required by law. Sherlock v. Vinson, 90 M 235, 1 P2d 71 (1931).

To have given the 10 days' notice in writing to a tenant present in person repudiating the lease and declaring that he could not go on with it would have been an idle act not required by law. First Nat'l Bank of Columbus v. Coit, 79 M 468, 257 P 469 (1927).

On the opening of school plaintiff knew that her former position was occupied and to appear there seeking to discharge the duties of that position would have resulted only in embarrassment to her successor, to the principal of the school, and to herself; it would have been but an idle gesture, and this section exactly fits the case. Le Clair v. School District, 74 M 385, 240 P 391 (1925).

Insolvency of Principal Obligor: Where in an action on a surety bond indemnifying a depositor in a bank against loss, the bank as principal has put it out of its power to fulfill the condition of the bond by becoming insolvent, a demand upon it for payment is not necessary to fix the liability of the sureties and therefore the complaint need not allege such demand. Mut. Oil Co. v. Hamilton, 73 M 385, 236 P 545 (1925).

Attorney General's Opinions

State Fee For State Bond: Law providing that the Secretary of State must charge a $5 fee for recording an official bond does not apply to bonds filed by state officers because that would result in the state charging itself, a needless bookkeeping expense. 28 A.G. Op. 48 (1959).

1-3-224. Trifles.

Case Notes

Employee's Remedy Against Employer for Assault: When employee's claim of assault against coworker consisted merely of "pats on the rear" and being called "sweetheart", nominal damages were justified because in a plant working environment a "pat on the rear" is hardly actionable assault and battery, for the law disregards trifles. Brown v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 167 M 418, 539 P2d 374 (1975).

Omission of Comma: The omission of a comma in quoting words of statute in caption of complaint to quiet title action was unimportant. Clinton v. Miller, 124 M 463, 226 P2d 487 (1951).

Misrepresentation as to Immaterial Facts: To constitute actionable fraud the representations must relate to material facts upon the theory that "the law disregards trifles". Stillwell v. Rankin, 55 M 130, 174 P 186 (1918).

1-3-225. Particular versus general.

Case Notes

Contradicting Clauses in Separate Contracts Construed Against Drafter — Employee Waiver — Health Insurance: The plaintiff health insurance company filed a breach of contract action against the defendant, an employer providing health insurance for its employees. The contracts between the parties required the defendant to cover 75% or more of its employees; however, a subsequent contract allowed the defendant's employees to waive coverage. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, finding that the two provisions in the contracts were ambiguous and the contract should be interpreted against the drafter. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the contracts must be interpreted as part of the same transaction and that giving effect to both contract provisions is not reasonably practical, that the ambiguity is construed against the drafter, that the newer specific contract controlled over the older general contract, and that the waiver provision was meant to modify the minimum employee participation provision. Mont. Health Network, Inc., v. Great Falls Orthopedic Associates, 2015 MT 186, 379 Mont 513, 353 P.3d 483.

Conflicting Taxation Statutes Not Invalid: Certain counties and individual taxpayers argued that statutes enacted to tax coal, oil, and natural gas were invalid because the statutes did not classify those properties as required by 15-6-101. The Supreme Court held that the specific statutes providing for taxation of coal, oil, and natural gas were superior to and not invalidated by the more general classification statute. Powder River County v. St., 2002 MT 259, 312 M 198, 60 P3d 357 (2002).

Specific Provisions Outweigh General in Same Section: In construing the apparently conflicting venue provisions of 25-2-118(2) and 25-2-118(3), the Supreme Court held that, as related to dissolution proceedings, the specific provisions in subsection (3) outweigh the general provisions of subsection (2). Therefore, the proper place for trial for an action for dissolution of marriage is the county where the petitioner has resided during the 90 days preceding commencement of the action. In re Marriage of Jones, 226 M 14, 736 P2d 94, 44 St. Rep. 422 (1987).

Costs — Expert Witness Fees: A District Court cannot award costs in excess of $10 a day per witness as costs for expert witnesses. The statute specifically limiting expert witness fees to $10 a day controls the general statute authorizing a District Court to award costs in accordance with the course and practice of the court. Witty v. Pluid, 220 M 272, 714 P2d 169, 43 St. Rep. 354 (1986), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

General Phrase in Livestock Quarantine Statute to Be Qualified by Previous Particular Phrase: The general phrase "all expenses" in the second sentence of 81-2-109 must be limited to those expenses particularly described in the first sentence of the statute. St. v. Sand Hills Beef, Inc., 196 M 77, 639 P2d 480, 38 St. Rep. 2140 (1981).

Pension Dispute Controlled by Two-Year Statute of Limitations: Appellant's action to adjust his retirement benefits based on a claim of two constitutional violations and promissory estoppel is barred by the Statute of Limitations (27-2-207) relating to property rights and is not controlled, as appellant contends, by 27-7-202, applying to written contracts, or 27-2-203, applying to obligations other than a contract. "Only in the broadest sense could 27-2-203 or 27-2-202 be considered controlling, and since there is a more specific statute involving injury to personal property rights, of which retirement benefits are one, the Supreme Court is constrained to follow the more specific statute." Rierson v. Mont., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195, 38 St. Rep. 3 (1981).

Conflicting Statutes: When there are two statutes, one of which deals with a subject in general terms and another in more detailed terms, the special statute controls the general statute to the extent of any inconsistency. St. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 181 M 225, 592 P2d 34 (1979).

1-3-228. Superfluity.

Case Notes

Referendum Title Unnecessarily Redundant but Legally Sufficient — Clarification in Ballot Statement Required: MEA-MFT challenged the title of a legislative referendum that ended same-day voter registration, claiming it was inaccurate and misleading. The title of the referendum "ensur[ed] compliance with the National Voter Registration Act", and a provision was placed in the bill referencing the federal law, although Montana was already compliant with the federal Act. MEA-MFT argued that the title's reference to the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) misled voters by suggesting that ending same-day voter registration was required by the Act. The Supreme Court found that although the reference to NVRA compliance was unnecessary, the superfluous language did not make it void. Nevertheless, the court found that the stand-alone title could lead to voter confusion and ordered the Attorney General to revise the ballot statement to make it clear that the NVRA did not require elimination of same-day voter registration. MEA-MFT v. St., 2014 MT 33, 374 Mont. 1, 318 P.3d 702.

Two Sales of Dangerous Drugs Charged as One Offense, but Only One Sale Proved — Conviction Stands: Defendant claimed that because he was charged with one offense of criminal sale of dangerous drugs (now criminal distribution of dangerous drugs), committed on two separate occasions, the state must prove his connection with both sales and that failure to prove his connection with one of the sales should result in dismissal of the entire charge. The Supreme Court relied on U.S. v. Bruno, 809 F2d 1097 (5th Cir. 1987), in holding that it is unnecessary to independently prove defendant's involvement in both sales when proof of either sale is sufficient to satisfy a prima facie case. Superfluity in an information does not vitiate; therefore, every charge in an information need not be proved to convict defendant of the offense, but only a sufficient number of charges in each count so as to make out a violation of the statute relied on. St. v. McColley, 239 M 466, 781 P2d 280, 46 St. Rep. 1836 (1989).

Irrigation District Proceedings: Where in an order establishing an irrigation district the descriptions of the lands included in it were sufficient, the fact that the court went further and made a tabulation under various headings such as gross area, area included, etc., did not render the order void, such matter having been surplusage which may properly be disregarded under the statutory maxim that superfluity does not vitiate. Walden v. Bitter Root Irrigation District, 68 M 281, 217 P 646 (1923).

1-3-229. Certainty.

Case Notes

Computation of Amounts: Where a pleading alleged a tender of the balance due under a contract of sale of real property but failed to set out the amount tendered and the exact amount may be arrived at by a simple mathematical calculation by reference to the allegations of the complaint, the pleading should be considered sufficient. Thompson v. Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 110 M 521, 105 P2d 683 (1940).

Names of Described Persons: The fact that the letter of the insured to the insurer suggesting a change of beneficiaries in his policy from his second wife to his children by his first wife did not name the proposed beneficiaries did not render the request insufficient, since under this section "that is certain which can be made certain". Bell v. Criviansky, 98 M 109, 37 P2d 673 (1934).

1-3-230. Void act.

Case Notes

Void Probate Order: All proceedings founded upon a void order of the District Court sitting in probate are ineffective for any purpose. The order is open to collateral attack and may be set aside at any time. St. v. McCracken, 91 M 157, 6 P2d 869 (1931).

1-3-232. Avoiding voidness.

Case Notes

Lack of Specificity in Statute Makes Statute Void — Absurd Interpretation: Plaintiffs suffered injury from inhaling dust-borne vermiculite, a known carcinogen, while working in a mine in Libby, Montana, but the injuries were not manifested until 1998 when plaintiffs were diagnosed as suffering from various forms of cancer induced by the dust present in the mine. In determining whether the state had an obligation to inspect the mine under a statute requiring inspection of an "industry", the District Court held that because the statute did not specifically require inspection of "mines", the state had no duty to inspect the Libby mine for causing occupational diseases. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that under the District Court's rationale, carried to its logical conclusion, the required inspection of an "industry" would require no inspections at all because no specific industry was included in the statute. This interpretation, the Supreme Court said, would make the statute void and was to be avoided. Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106 P3d 100 (2004).

Deaf and Blind School Employee Contracts Not Personal Services Contracts — Employees Entitled to Annual Leave and Holiday Pay Accrued: Employees of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind signed standard form year-to-year employment contracts that granted them "all holidays and annual leave to which [the employee] is entitled under state law" and "all employee benefits to which [the employee] is entitled under the laws of the State of Montana". The employees were required to work evenings and to be on call much of the time. Nevertheless, the employees were required to complete time cards showing employment for only 8-hour days and were paid for only that time. The employees submitted a claim to the Board of Public Education for annual leave and holiday pay accrued but not paid and sued the Board when it refused to pay them. The Board defended, claiming that the employees' contracts were personal services contracts and that therefore the employees were exempt from the definition of an "employee" under 2-18-601. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment for the employees because the employees were not hired on an ad hoc basis because of the highly technical nature of their employment—rather, the employees are year-round employees given the benefit of the state group health plan and given grade and pay increases on state payroll accounting forms. The Supreme Court concluded that to hold otherwise would mean that all state employees are hired under personal services contracts and no state employee is entitled to annual leave and holiday pay, a construction that the Supreme Court determined would be unreasonable. Corwin v. Bd. of Pub. Educ., 272 M 14, 898 P2d 1227, 52 St. Rep. 589 (1995).

Ski Area's Duties Not Limited to Statutory Duties: In response to an injured skier's allegations of negligence, the ski area asserted that its duties were limited to those set forth in 23-2-733 and that because the skier did not allege any breach of the statutory duties, the ski area was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Applying a court's role in statutory construction to simply ascertain and declare what is contained in the section's terms and substance without inserting what has been omitted, the Supreme Court found that in neither the original enactment of 23-2-733 nor in subsequent amendments did the Legislature provide that a ski area's only duties were those enumerated in that section and that there was no other duty of due care owed by operators to skiers. The duty of due care is imposed by 27-1-701. In holding that the operator's duties were not limited to those listed in 23-2-733, the court interpreted the statute in a way that would give it effect rather than in a way that would render it unconstitutional. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Modification of Property Settlement Resulting in Conflicting Provisions — Interpretation Giving Effect, Not Voidness, Preferred: An original property settlement agreement provided that husband and wife would equally divide the proceeds from the sale of their house. An escrow agreement, signed by all parties, later assigned the balances on a percentage basis, 72% to wife and 28% to husband, and further provided that wife would receive a total of $30,000 from the net proceeds of the sale. However, the percentage amount did not approximate the total amount. Husband contended that because the conflicting portions could not be taken together so as to give effect to every part of the contract and the intention of the parties, the modification should be voided and the original equal division contained in the dissolution should rule. The District Court inquired as to the instrument's intent and its legal consequences, favoring effect over voidness. The court properly confined its inquiry to the language of the instrument and held that the 72/28 provision ruled. The interpretation was reasonable and within the scope of the court's inquiry. In re Marriage of Bourque, 241 M 38, 785 P2d 699, 47 St. Rep. 64 (1990).

Exception to Procedural Requirements of Tax Break Statute: Plaintiff, at hearing by the State Tax Appeal Board, was denied tax benefits under the Montana Economic Land Development Act (MELDA), specifically under section 84-7526, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which created an exception to the local implementation requirement. The trial court found for plaintiff. In affirming, the Supreme Court found a clear purpose for MELDA and held that if the Legislature did not intend for there to be an exception to the procedural requirements of the Act, it would not have adopted language creating an exception because the Legislature does not perform useless acts. An interpretation that gives effect is always preferred over an interpretation that makes a statute void or treats the statute as mere surplusage. The decision of the Board did not reconcile the provisions of MELDA in such a manner as to honor the legislative purpose behind it. Am. Linen Supply v. Dept. of Revenue, 189 M 542, 617 P2d 131, 37 St. Rep. 1707 (1980), followed in Corwin v. Bd. of Pub. Educ., 272 M 14, 898 P2d 1227, 52 St. Rep. 589 (1995).

Water Adjudication Program Not Void Given Sufficient Line Item Appropriations to Avoid Voidness: A contingent voidness clause attached to legislation establishing the water adjudication account required that at least $2 million each fiscal year be appropriated to the water adjudication account by line item appropriation. Although the line item appropriations were directed to two agencies instead of being included in a single programmatic line item, the Attorney General concluded that more than $2 million had been appropriated from state sources other than the water adjudication account to avoid the contingent voidness provision. 51 A.G. Op. 3 (2005).

County Jails — City's Use: Because the consent of the County Commissioners is required before a municipality may use the county jail, it was not presumed that consent was meaningless, and therefore counties may refuse the use of county jails for confinement of persons accused or convicted of violating local ordinances. Likewise, a county may charge a municipality for maintaining prisoners committed to county jail at the request of a municipal police department in the course of enforcing local ordinances and state laws. 37 A.G. Op. 10 (1977).

1-3-233. Reasonableness.

Case Notes

Lifetime Hunting, Fishing, and Trapping Ban Not Subject to Early Termination Statute — Statutory Interpretation Must Be Reasonable: A lifetime hunting, fishing, and trapping prohibition under 87-6-202 is not subject to early termination under 46-18-208 because the prohibition is a separate, independent penalty and not a condition of a suspended sentence. Statutory interpretation must be reasonable and should not lead to absurd results if a reasonable interpretation would avoid it. Holding otherwise would lead to the absurd result of rendering a "lifetime" prohibition meaningless because it would end not with a person's lifetime but with the termination or expiration of a person's sentence. St. v. Harrison, 2016 MT 271, 385 Mont. 227, 383 P.3d 202.

Contradicting Clauses in Separate Contracts Construed Against Drafter — Employee Waiver — Health Insurance: The plaintiff health insurance company filed a breach of contract action against the defendant, an employer providing health insurance for its employees. The contracts between the parties required the defendant to cover 75% or more of its employees; however, a subsequent contract allowed the defendant's employees to waive coverage. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, finding that the two provisions in the contracts were ambiguous and the contract should be interpreted against the drafter. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the contracts must be interpreted as part of the same transaction and that giving effect to both contract provisions is not reasonably practical, that the ambiguity is construed against the drafter, that the newer specific contract controlled over the older general contract, and that the waiver provision was meant to modify the minimum employee participation provision. Mont. Health Network, Inc., v. Great Falls Orthopedic Associates, 2015 MT 186, 379 Mont 513, 353 P.3d 483.

Modification of Custody Order Required by Substantial Change in Circumstances — Application of In re Marriage of Johnson Required — Jurisdictional Prerequisites — Absurd Application of Statute Avoided: After making an agreement for child custody as part of the dissolution of her marriage, Kimberly determined to attend college and moved from Lewistown to Billings with her children. On a remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court held that In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689 (1994), did not apply because custody was not being transferred from the primary custodian to the secondary custodian. The Supreme Court held that contrary to the District Court's interpretation, Johnson did apply to the case and that Johnson applied to any case in which a custody modification would have the effect of substantially changing the children's primary residence, requiring that the District Court must first meet the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219. However, the Supreme Court found that a literal application of that statute would cause an absurd result by its application only to movement of a child to another state and not to instances in which the child is moved from one end of the state to another or to another country. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that if a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the child's custodian, causing the children to move from one location to another in a manner that would hinder the effectiveness of the custody arrangement, then the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-219 have been met and the District Court may modify the custody arrangement pursuant to 40-4-212. The Supreme Court then applied the rule to the case before it and concluded that the modification of the custody arrangement changing the custody of Kimberly's ex-husband from 160 days to 75 days annually was in the best interests of the children, as demonstrated in the record. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997), followed in In re Marriage of Oehlke, 2002 MT 79, 309 M 254, 46 P3d 49 (2002).

Demand for Performance of Term Not Contained in Contract — Statement That Party Will Not Perform Unless Demand Met — Anticipatory Breach of Contract: "A party acts at his peril if, insisting on what he mistakenly believes to be his rights, he refuses to perform his duty." Therefore, a demand for performance of a term not contained in the parties' contract, accompanied by an unequivocal statement that the demanding party will not perform unless the additional term is met, constitutes an anticipatory breach of the contract, excusing performance by the other party. In determining whether an anticipatory breach was committed, the concern is whether the promisor communicated an unequivocal indication of an intent not to perform rather than the promisor's uncommunicated subjective intent in repudiating its contractual obligations. A promisee need not jeopardize its own interests by speculating about the promisor's clear refusal to perform or by waiting until the time set for performance to ascertain whether the promisor's unequivocal repudiation was serious. Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237, 53 St. Rep. 593 (1996), following United Calif. Bank v. Prudential Ins. Co, 681 P2d 390 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1983), and followed in Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001). See also Comment d, Restatement (Second) of Contracts 250 (1981), and Boyne USA, Inc. v. Deaf and Blind School Employee Contracts Not Personal Services Contracts — Employees Entitled to Annual Leave and Holiday Pay Accrued: Employees of the Montana School for the Deaf and Blind signed standard form year-to-year employment contracts that granted them "all holidays and annual leave to which [the employee] is entitled under state law" and "all employee benefits to which [the employee] is entitled under the laws of the State of Montana". The employees were required to work evenings and to be on call much of the time. Nevertheless, the employees were required to complete time cards showing employment for only 8-hour days and were paid for only that time. The employees submitted a claim to the Board of Public Education for annual leave and holiday pay accrued but not paid and sued the Board when it refused to pay them. The Board defended, claiming that the employees' contracts were personal services contracts and that therefore the employees were exempt from the definition of an "employee" under 2-18-601. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment for the employees because the employees were not hired on an ad hoc basis because of the highly technical nature of their employment—rather, the employees are year-round employees given the benefit of the state group health plan and given grade and pay increases on state payroll accounting forms. The Supreme Court concluded that to hold otherwise would mean that all state employees are hired under personal services contracts and no state employee is entitled to annual leave and holiday pay, a construction that the Supreme Court determined would be unreasonable. Corwin v. Bd. of Pub. Educ., 272 M 14, 898 P2d 1227, 52 St. Rep. 589 (1995).

Statutory Construction — Reasonableness of Alternatives: When the result of one among alternative possible interpretations of a constitutional provision is unreasonable, the interpretation is in favor of another which would produce a reasonable result. Yunker v. Murray, 170 M 427, 554 P2d 285 (1976); Keller v. Smith, 170 M 399, 553 P2d 1002 (1976).

Corporate Defendant's Right of Indemnity From Joint Tortfeasor — Fraudulent Misrepresentation: Where the plaintiff sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging misrepresentation by the defendant company and its president, and the record showed that both the company's plant manager and its president made misrepresentations concerning the status of the company's compliance with air and water pollution control laws, the court erroneously required the company's president to indemnify the company for the judgment against it. Because the company is responsible as a principal for the fraudulent misrepresentations of its plant manager, the company and its president were joint tortfeasors and were in pari delicto. As a general rule, one compelled to pay damages for the negligent or tortious act of another is not entitled to indemnity from the latter where both parties are joint tortfeasors or in pari delicto. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981), followed in St. v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2009 MT 414, 353 M 497, 220 P3d 1115 (2009).

Surety's Liability: This statute was one ground for holding surety liable on bond even though bond was not in effect at time act occurred giving rise to liability, since surety company had been tardy in processing papers of party to be bonded and had accepted the premium on bond. Lapke v. Hunt, 151 M 450, 443 P2d 493 (1968).

Contract of Sale: In vendor's action against subsequent bona fide purchaser to determine ownership and right to possession of an airplane, vendor was estopped to challenge sale by vendee by failing to record title document to avoid transfer tax, making no inquiry for a number of months about the plane, which he allowed vendee to have, even though the payments were due under the contract, and failing to make a diligent effort to recover the plane after the payments became due. Lakes v. Orley, 148 M 325, 420 P2d 151 (1966).

Failure to Record Contract: Where purchaser of standing timber failed to have contract acknowledged and recorded, such contract was of no effect as against a subsequent purchaser without knowledge of the first purchaser's interest. Gullicksen v. Shadoan, 124 M 56, 218 P2d 714 (1950).

Joint Bank Accounts: Where a mother opened joint bank account in both her own and daughter's names, signed signature card setting out withdrawal provision authorizing both to withdraw the funds, and the daughter drew a check covering practically the entire account, the bank was legally bound to pay it, and if the mother suffered injury it resulted from exercise of the power the mother placed in the daughter's hands, bringing the mother under the provisions of the maxim contained in this section. Ludwig v. Mont. Bank & Trust Co., 109 M 477, 98 P2d 379 (1939).

Apparent Agency:

Where plaintiff wrote and delivered to defendants a fire insurance policy contracted for by the father of one of the defendants who managed the store for them and who the previous year had tended to the same matter with the defendants paying the premium, the fact that the defendants had obtained fire insurance from a different company could not defeat plaintiff's claim since under this section those through whose fault the loss is sustained must bear it, defendants having impliedly held out their store manager as their agent, and plaintiff is entitled to recover the $42 premium for the policy sold to manager. Coover v. Davis, 112 M 605, 121 P2d 985 (1941).

In a foreclosure suit in which the defense was payment, the evidence showed that the mortgagee knew that the property had been transferred to another by the mortgagor with the purchaser assuming the mortgage. The interest coupons were payable at the office of a real estate dealer where the mortgagee had originally listed the property for sale, where he received payment therefore and also a part payment on his note. He was advised by the purchaser that the entire debt had been paid at that office on a certain day. The real estate agent converted the final payment to his own use. The mortgagee by his conduct caused the purchaser to believe that the real estate dealer was his agent for the purpose of receiving payment, and therefore he was estopped to deny his authority to receive it. Millious v. Thompson, 94 M 110, 20 P2d 1060 (1933).

Notice of Assignment of Note: The assignee of a nonnegotiable note is presumed to know the law, and if he would protect his interests he should notify the maker of the note that he is the assignee thereof. If he neglects to do so, and through his negligence either he or the maker must suffer through the act of the payee in collecting the amount due on the note, he should be the one to suffer. Erlandson v. Erskine, 76 M 537, 248 P 209 (1926).

INTERPRETATION OF INSTRUMENTS

Part 1
General Provisions

1-4-101. Role of the judge — preference to construction giving each provision meaning.

Plain Language of Statute Applied — Enhanced Protection Against Forced Medication — District Court Reversed Because Appellant Never Refused to Take Medication: The District Court erred in authorizing involuntary medication. The appellant had never refused to take her medication, and a finding or general understanding that an individual with bipolar disorder may at some undisclosed future point in time decide not to take medications is insufficient to satisfy the plain language of the statute requiring that involuntary medication is necessary. The Legislature sought to enhance protection against forced medication of the mentally ill by enacting 53-21-145, specifically declaring that patients have the right to be free from unnecessary or excessive medication. A finding and conclusion that in the future a person may become noncompliant is insufficient to meet this statutory requirement. In re R.H., 2016 MT 329, 385 Mont. 530, 385 P.3d 556, distinguished in In re C.B., 2017 MT 83, 387 Mont. 231, 392 P.3d 598, to the extent that, unlike C.B., R.H. had no history of medication noncompliance.

Interpretation of Trust Agreement — Plain Language Controls: After the death of the sole beneficiary of an irrevocable inter vivos trust, the daughter of the sole beneficiary, whom the sole beneficiary had given up for adoption, claimed that she was a descendent of the sole beneficiary as defined under the trust and was entitled to distribution of the trust proceeds. The District Court determined that the daughter should be included in the trust distribution. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the trust language, which defined an adopted child as the descendant of the adopting parents, made no distinction between children adopted into and adopted out of a family. The daughter was not a descendant of the sole beneficiary because she was adopted and was therefore regarded under the plain language of the trust as the descendant of her adoptive parents. In re Kincaid Gift Trust, 2012 MT 119, 365 Mont. 179, 278 P.3d 1026.

Living Trust — Judicial Construction of Amendment so as to Give Effect to All Provisions: Clifford and his wife Mary established a living trust for the benefit of their family. The trust documents provided that major modifications to the trust should be made through the formal amendment process but that minor modifications could be made through trust minutes. Other trust documents provided that amendments had to be made by Clifford and Mary acting together, and the first page of the trust minutes provided that instructions to successor trustees must be signed and dated by the trust settlors. The District Court found that the fourth trust minute, amending other trust documents so as to convey the 120-acre farm on which Clifford and Mary lived to Mary, to be valid and binding. The Supreme Court held that the fourth trust minute, which was signed only by Clifford, was invalid because a construction of all of the other provisions of the trust dealing with amendments and the provisions of this section required that the fourth trust minute be signed by both Clifford and Mary. Consequently, the Supreme Court held that the farm remained in the separate property trust and was conveyed to the children of Clifford and Mary and not to Mary alone. In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123, 53 St. Rep. 1087 (1996).

Contract With Dispute Resolution Clause Not Superseded by Unexecuted Oral Agreement: Nelcon made an agreement with the state for highway construction work, and Nelcon subcontracted the clearing of trees to Westfork, agreeing that Westfork could have the timber that was removed from the property. After discovering that the timber belonged to Champion and had been removed, Westfork wrote Nelcon, requiring additional payment for the missing trees. Nelcon provided notice to the state that Nelcon needed additional compensation for the missing trees and was paid approximately $20,000, which Nelcon paid to Westfork. Westfork brought an action against Nelcon for additional compensation, and the District Court granted a directed verdict for Nelcon. Citing Kraft v. Hodson, 254 M 262, 836 P2d 1234 (1992), the Supreme Court held that there was no executed oral modification of the original contract. The Supreme Court also held that the language of the original contract was clear in its meaning, binding Westfork to the same rights against Nelcon that Nelcon had against the state. Westfork Constr. Co. v. Nelcon, Inc., 265 M 398, 877 P2d 481, 51 St. Rep. 553 (1994), distinguished in Lewistown Miller Constr. Co., Inc. v. Martin, 2011 MT 325, 363 Mont. 208, 271 P.3d 48.

Contract Providing for Both Termination and Renegotiation — Plain Language to Determine Parties' Standing: Paragraph 7 of a contract provided that the contract terminated on June 30, 1996. Paragraph 10 provided for renegotiation of the contract upon 30 days' written notice from either party. The District Court found the provisions to be at odds with each other. The law favors giving effect to each provision of a contract, and courts must interpret contractual provisions so as to allow each provision to be effective. Courts are without authority to insert components in or erase components from unambiguous contract provisions. Upon review, the Supreme Court looked to the plain language in the contract and found that paragraph 10 did not render the contract vague or indefinite; rather, it provided for a continuing contractual relationship if, after notice, a successful renegotiation was accomplished. The District Court erred, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Letter Relating to Execution of Lease — Properly Accepted Parol Evidence: In reviewing the trial court's interpretation of the heating cost provisions of a 5-year lease, the Supreme Court held that a letter containing a payment schedule and testimony relating to the schedule were properly accepted parol testimony to explain circumstances surrounding the lease agreement. The letter and testimony aided in resolving the ambiguity existing in the instrument as permitted by 28-2-905(2). The role of the judge is to construe an instrument according to its terms or its substance, not to insert or omit terms. The judge, however, may consider circumstances surrounding the execution, including the situation of the subject of the instrument and of the parties, to place himself in a position to interpret the language. In construing terms, evidence is admissible to show a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification used and understood by the parties. Martin v. Laurel Cable TV, Inc., 215 M 229, 696 P2d 454, 42 St. Rep. 314 (1985).

Time of Mortgage Payments — Where Contract Silent as to Time of Day: According to the terms of the mortgage, monthly payments were to be made no later than 30 days after due date or mortgagor could be declared in default. Mortgagor deposited payment in escrow account after 3 p.m. on the 30th day, a Friday. Because of the time of the deposit, the escrow account was not credited until the 33rd day, the following Monday. The District Court ruled that the mortgage contract had not been breached since contract provided simply for deposit by 30th day and did not require that deposit be made by a particular time of day. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that for the District Court to have found in mortgagee's favor, it would have had to rewrite the contract, and this would have been improper. First Bank-Southside Missoula v. Sadler, 199 M 323, 649 P2d 454, 39 St. Rep. 1428 (1982).

Written and Oral Real Property Agreements — No Timing of Valuation Provision: The parties were married in 1973. They entered a prenuptial agreement providing that the real and personal property of each would remain separate. In 1974, defendant brought a quiet title action against his sisters. He executed a handwritten agreement with plaintiff that if she would finance the legal expenses of the action he would give her 10% of the land or the value thereof. He was successful, and the parties entered into an oral agreement containing the same provisions for appellate costs. The trial court found that defendant owed plaintiff 20% of the value of the land and that the value was to be determined at the time he elected to pay and be based on 20% of the value of all the land. The Supreme Court held that the defendant, under the clear terms of the written contract, had the option to select the acreage which he wished to convey. The District Court, in its initial findings, disregarded this language in ordering him to convey the percentage of his land as a whole. Since no contract provision addressed the timing of the valuation of the land and conflicting evidence was presented, the District Court's initial determination that it be valued at the time of payment was upheld. Kartes v. Kartes, 195 M 383, 636 P2d 272, 38 St. Rep. 1941 (1981).

Summary Judgment on Construction of Instruments: When a summary judgment was granted plaintiff in an action for conversion based upon corporate documents (bank loan contracts and security agreements), defendants could not prevail on appeal on the theory that questions regarding the content of these documents were questions of material fact which would preclude the granting of a summary judgment under former Rule 56(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because under this section the construction of instruments is a matter of law. Farmers St. Bank v. Johnson, 188 M 55, 610 P2d 1172 (1980).

Lack of Consideration or Setoff: There was no issue of material fact precluding summary judgment, either of lack of consideration or of setoff, because the express language of the note sued on stated that consideration existed and the second action was a personal claim unrelated to the note. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Medical Information — Not a Condition Precedent to Attorneys' Fees: When the statute did not specifically require medical information to be furnished prior to an award of attorneys' fees, the Supreme Court would not read that requirement into the statute. Myers v. 4 B's Restaurant, Inc., 172 M 159, 561 P2d 1331 (1977).

Unambiguous Contract Requires No Interpretation: Court erred in imposing a restriction on the use of premises when life tenant was granted the right to use premises "as he may deem fit". Danielson v. Danielson, 172 M 55, 560 P2d 893 (1977).

Insurance Policy: Clause in disability insurance policy, which provided that benefits were payable only in cases involving continuous and total disability within 30 days of date of accident preventing performance of every duty pertaining to insured's occupation, precluded recovery under policy by insured who returned to work temporarily within 30-day period and was able to do a portion of his duties since, where language admits of only one meaning, there is no room for interpretation under the guise of ambiguity. Nelson v. Combined Ins. Co. of America, 155 M 105, 467 P2d 707 (1970).

Surety Bond: In construing an instrument, the judge's office is simply to ascertain and declare what it contains in terms or substance, not to insert omitted matter or omit inserted matter. A subcontractor was not entitled to recover from surety on federal building contractor's bond for loss suffered because of delays growing out of others' acts or omissions. United States ex rel. Watsabaugh & Co. v. Seaboard Sur. Co., 26 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

Trust Agreement: In interpreting the language of a trust agreement the province of the court under this section is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or substance contained therein. Conley v. Johnson, 101 M 376, 54 P2d 585 (1936).

Employment Rules: In an action by an engineer for injuries received by jumping from his engine to avoid a collision, where the language of the defendant company's rules relative to the operation of its trains under the block signal system was plain and its meaning apparent, it was the duty of the trial court to declare that meaning and not leave it to the speculation of the jury. Lynes v. N. Pac. Ry., 43 M 317, 117 P 81 (1911).

Deed Within Chain of Title Not Considered Extrinsic Evidence: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, the District Court properly examined the chains of title to the parties' properties in determining the boundary. A deed contained in the chain of title, which provided the first description of the disputed boundary, was not extrinsic evidence and, therefore, was properly considered. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Expectation of Arbitration Unreasonable Under Contract of Adhesion: Plaintiff signed a contract to purchase a used motor home and subsequently discovered that it needed $17,000 in mitigation damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and the motion was granted, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that because plaintiff's options were to accept or reject the contract without an opportunity to negotiate the preprinted terms, the contract was one of adhesion. The arbitration clause in the contract by which plaintiff waived various constitutional and procedural rights was not within plaintiff's reasonable expectations, so the arbitration clause was determined to be unenforceable. The District Court was reversed. Woodruff v. Bretz, Inc., 2009 MT 329, 353 M 6, 218 P3d 486 (2009), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), distinguishing Denton v. First Interstate Bank of Commerce, 2006 MT 193, 333 M 169, 142 P3d 797 (2006).

No Improper Reliance on Extrinsic Evidence in Finding of Valid and Enforceable Express 60-Foot Easement for Subdivision: Defendant acquired certain property after an express easement across the property was created by the former owner. Defendant refused to allow the building of an access road across the property, contending that the easement agreement was invalid on several grounds. The District Court examined the agreement and concluded that the easement was valid and enforceable and granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, defendant asserted that the District Court erroneously relied on facts outside the agreement, making summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For purposes of interpreting a writing granting an interest in real property, evidence of the surrounding circumstances, including the situation of the property and the context of the parties' agreement, may be shown so that the judge is placed in the position of those whose language the judge is to interpret. However, to comply with the statute of frauds and the recording system, the writing itself must ultimately stand on its own and meet the formal requirements for granting a property interest. In this case, the District Court was allowed to consider various facts not contained in the easement agreement for purposes of understanding the situation, but the court's analysis of the easement's validity apparently was limited to the face of the agreement, so the court did not erroneously rely on extrinsic facts. The easement agreement satisfied the formal requirements for expressly granting an easement and created a valid 60-foot emergency public access and utility easement that was enforceable against defendant. Additionally, the District Court properly concluded that because there was no dominant tenement, the easement was in gross and could be used by members of the public to travel between the subdivision and the public highway for emergency purposes and to provide utility services. There being no questions of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Broadwater Dev., LLC v. Nelson, 2009 MT 317, 352 M 401, 219 P3d 492 (2009), distinguishing Blazer v. Wall, 2008 MT 145, 343 M 173, 183 P3d 84 (2008). See also Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982 (1985).

No Ambiguity in Complete, Final Sales Agreement — Parol Evidence Inadmissible: The parties entered a sale agreement for a ready-mix concrete plant. Plaintiff subsequently filed an action alleging that defendant violated the agreement by breaching the covenant to not compete and the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which constituted malice resulting in lost profits, sales, and goodwill. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that the sales agreement constituted a complete, final agreement and unambiguously did not include a noncompetition provision, but in fact provided that plaintiff would sell concrete to defendant for use in the area. The intention of the parties was ascertainable from the writing alone, and the agreement was presumed to represent all transactions regarding elements extrinsic to the agreement and was thus considered complete and final, so parol evidence was inadmissible. Evidence of Circumstances Under Which Instrument Made Admissible for Determining Ambiguity: As a general rule, evidence of the circumstances under which an instrument was made may not be considered when the language of the instrument is clear and certain in its terms. However, objective evidence of those circumstances, including the situation of the subject of the instrument and the parties to it, may be shown and considered to aid the court in determining, as a preliminary matter, whether the instrument contains an ambiguity. If the court determines that no ambiguity exists, then the extrinsic evidence may not be considered further, but if the court determines that an ambiguity is present in the instrument, then the extrinsic evidence may be introduced at trial to allow the trier of fact to determine the intent of the parties in entering into the contract. In the present case, both parties agreed that language in a right-of-way contract was unambiguous, so the trial court did not err in refusing to consider the circumstances under which the contract was made. Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007). See 11 Williston on Contracts, 33:39 (4th Ed. 1999). See also Watters v. Billings, 2017 MT 211, 388 Mont. 376, 404 P.3d 379.

Use of Phrase "Together With" in Contract Not Considered Limiting Language: The contract for a utility right-of-way granted defendants the right to construct, maintain, and operate a pipeline for the transportation of oil, liquids, and gases "together with" a buried fiber optic communications cable. The right-of-way landowners contended that the phrase "together with" unambiguously limited the use of the cable to operating and monitoring the pipeline and precluded defendants from leasing part of the cable to a third party for telecommunication purposes. The District Court disagreed, holding that the phrase meant nothing more than "and", rather than plaintiffs' limiting interpretation "in connection with", and granted summary judgment for defendants. The landowners appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The term "together with" in the granting language did not unambiguously limit defendants' use of the fiber optic cable to operating and monitoring the pipeline. Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007).

Promissory Note Not Considered Contract of Adhesion: Plaintiff read and signed a promissory note to secure a loan for a friend who subsequently went bankrupt. The promissory note provided that plaintiff waived the right to rely on the defense of impairment. Nevertheless, after defendant bank foreclosed on the property that plaintiff used to secure the loan, plaintiff claimed impairment, arguing that the waiver constituted a contract of adhesion that was unenforceable. The District Court disagreed, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a contract of adhesion is a contract whose terms are dictated by one party to another who has no voice in the contract's formulation and that the contract is unenforceable if it is not within the expectations of the weaker party or if the contract terms are unduly oppressive, unconscionable, or against public policy. Plaintiff was a sophisticated businessman who did not attempt to negotiate the contract terms and who studied the contract prior to signing and thus could not later claim that he was unaware of the waiver provision and that it was not within his reasonable expectations. Although the bank prepared the contract, the transaction was entered solely at plaintiff's behest, and plaintiff voluntarily waived the defense of collateral impairment under 30-3-607. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded that the promissory note was not a contract of adhesion, nor were the contract's general provisions outside of plaintiff's reasonable expectations. The District Court was affirmed. Denton v. First Interstate Bank of Commerce, 2006 MT 193, 333 M 169, 142 P3d 797 (2006), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002).

Investment Agreement Containing Arbitration Clause Considered Contract of Adhesion — Remand for Consideration of Investor's Reasonable Expectations and Potential Contract Formation Defenses: Zigrang entered an investment agreement with defendant investment company. The agreement contained an arbitration provision. When Zigrang learned that defendant frequently traded securities in Zigrang's account without permission, Zigrang filed a complaint, which was one of 23 suits filed by investors alleging defendant's mismanagement of accounts. Defendant moved to compel arbitration pursuant to the agreement. A panel of three judges sat en banc to hear evidence common to all 23 cases. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration was denied, but the order contained common findings of fact that did not apply to Zigrang, including a mischaracterization of Zigrang's investment agreement. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the agreement constituted a contract of adhesion that supported other contract formation defenses, but did not in itself constitute a sufficient basis for invalidating the agreement. The Supreme Court was unable to completely examine Zigrang's contract formation defenses, including unconscionability, waiver, and reasonable expectations, because the District Court's order relied on the mistaken finding of fact. Thus, the court remanded for further findings of fact related to Zigrang's investment agreement, noting that an inquiry into Zigrang's expectations should consist only of an analysis of Zigrang's objectively reasonable expectations regarding the agreement from Zigrang's perspective and that Zigrang's expectations might negate the arbitration provisions. Zigrang v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 282, 329 M 239, 123 P3d 237 (2005). See also Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), and Kloss v. Edward D. Predispute Arbitration Provisions Unenforceable — Motion to Compel Arbitration Properly Denied: Plaintiff opened several Piper Automatic Transfer Accounts and later brought an action alleging defendants' mismanagement of the accounts. Defendants sought to compel arbitration based on predispute arbitration clauses in the account agreements requiring that any dispute be resolved by arbitration. The motion to compel arbitration was denied, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the agreements granted defendants' brokers the discretion to buy and sell securities, a fiduciary duty was created that defendants breached by failing to explain the consequences of the arbitration provision prior to formation of the contract. The predispute arbitration provisions were therefore unenforceable, and denial of the motion to compel arbitration was affirmed. Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002). See also Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993).

Conscionability Analysis of Contractual Liquidated Damages Clause — Liquidated Damages Clause Presumed Enforceable: To provide direction to contracting parties and resolve the disparities in case law regarding liquidated damages, the Supreme Court adopted a rule to analyze liquidated damages clauses from the perspective of whether or not the clause is unconscionable as indicated by the nature of the bargaining process between the parties. Unconscionability involves a two-pronged determination regarding whether: (1) the clause fits the doctrine of contract of adhesion such that the weaker party had no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of the contract provisions; and (2) the contractual terms are unreasonably favorable to the drafter, which is usually the party with superior bargaining power. Whether the clause is unreasonably favorable to the drafter in turn involves an inquiry into whether the clause is within the reasonable expectations of or unduly oppressive to the weaker party. Liquidated damages clauses are presumed enforceable, and the party seeking to avoid the clause has the burden of proving unconscionability. Unless there are underlying disputed issues of fact, the question of unconscionability is purely a matter of law for the court to decide. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003), overruling Daugherty Cattle Co. v. Gen. Constr. Co., 254 M 479, 839 P2d 562 (1992), to the extent that it prevented one party from introducing relevant evidence by granting summary judgment based on contract language alone, overruling Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202 (1993), to the extent that it placed the burden on the nonbreaching party to prove the enforceability of a liquidated damages clause, and followed in Highway Specialties, Inc. v. Mont. Dept. of Transportation, 2009 MT 253, 351 M 527, 215 P3d 667 (2009).

Liquidated Damages Clause in Personal Services Contract — Conscionability of Liquidated Damages Clause in Teacher's Form Contract: In determining the enforceability of a 20% liquidated damages clause in defendant's teaching contract, the Supreme Court examined the conscionability of the clause. The court first held that the clause constituted a contract of adhesion because defendant, as the weaker bargaining party, had no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of the contract provisions. The court also noted that the contract was a form contract that provided no negotiation between the parties. However, the court held that unconscionability does not render all form contracts unacceptable and that form contracts are only unconscionable if the terms are not within the reasonable expectation of the party who had no opportunity to negotiate. Although the liquidated damages clause in defendant's contract was harsher than most, as a teacher, defendant knew that teachers are typically employed for an entire year and how difficult it is to replace equivalent services at small rural schools, so it was within defendant's reasonable expectations to agree to a contract with a 20% liquidated damages provision for departing so close to the start of the school year, even though defendant had no meaningful choice regarding the provision. The enforceability of the liquidated damages clause was affirmed. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003).

Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Considered Contract of Adhesion: When plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge claim, defendant pointed out that the employment was covered by a union collective bargaining agreement (CBA) and that 39-2-912 precludes an employee covered by a CBA from seeking relief under the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. At argument in District Court on defendant's motion for summary judgment, plaintiff argued that the CBA was a contract of adhesion. The District Court held that the CBA was not a contract of adhesion and granted summary judgment, and on appeal the Supreme Court agreed. A contract of adhesion is a contract with terms dictated by one contracting party to another party who has no voice in the contract's formulation, and such contracts are unenforceable if they are not within the reasonable expectations of the weaker party or if they are unduly oppressive, unconscionable, or against public policy. Because CBAs arise only after a public employer and a union representative have bargained collectively and in good faith, it cannot be said that one party dictates the terms of a CBA to another, so a CBA cannot be considered a contract of adhesion. The court noted that under Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), a contract of adhesion may also be found in cases when an contract arbitration provision is presented on a standardized form without the opportunity for negotiation. Arbitration provisions are also negotiated in a CBA rather than dictated by standardized form, so Kloss did not apply. Summary judgment was affirmed. LaFournaise v. Mont. Developmental Center, 2003 MT 240, 317 M 283, 77 P3d 202 (2003).

Security Brokerage Contracts — Contract of Adhesion Rendering Arbitration Clause Unenforceable: Kloss opened a full-service brokerage account with defendant, which permitted Kloss to purchase securities and maintain a money market account and which included a living trust account. The account did well, and Kloss decided to set up a charitable trust with the bond proceeds. The initial account and the living trust agreement contained a mandatory arbitration clause, and the charitable trust incorporated the arbitration clause by reference. Kloss then had second thoughts about the charitable trust and petitioned to revoke it. Defendant moved to compel arbitration, and the District Court granted the motion, citing Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993), and Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), for the holding that defendant had no obligation to explain the terms of the contract because it was within Kloss's reasonable expectations and that even if the contract was considered a contract of adhesion, it was not unenforceable because it was not unconscionable. Kloss appealed, arguing that the arbitration clause was part of a contract of adhesion and that waiver of the constitutional right to jury trial should not be presumed from the signing of a contract of adhesion. Defendant maintained that form contracts prepared by securities brokers are not contracts of adhesion dictated by one party to another who has no voice in its formulation, and that arbitration clauses contained in the contracts are not unconscionable. The Supreme Court examined Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298 (1986), for an explanation of contracts of adhesion in the securities context and the circumstances under which they are unenforceable. The court distinguished both Chor and Passage, finding that the contracts in this case were clearly contracts of adhesion because they were standardized forms containing terms that Kloss had no opportunity to negotiate if wishing to invest with defendant. Further, the arbitration clause by which Kloss waived the right to access to state courts, the right to jury trial, the right to reasonable discovery, the right to findings of fact based on the evidence, and the right to enforce the law by way of appeal was clearly not within Kloss's reasonable expectations. The arbitration clause was never explained by defendant, and Kloss was not aware of the arbitration provision in the contract. Thus, the District Court committed reversible error when it concluded that the arbitration clause was enforceable. Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), followed in Larsen v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2007 MT 270, 339 M 407, 170 P3d 956 (2007), with regard to factors to be applied in determining a contract of adhesion.

Burden of Proof on Plaintiff to Establish Title and Boundary Line in Quiet Title Action: In an action to quiet title to real property, the burden is on plaintiff on all issues arising upon the essential allegations of the complaint. If the answer denies plaintiff's title, plaintiff must prove title in himself. Want of title in plaintiff renders an examination of defendant's title unnecessary. The burden of proof is also on plaintiff to establish the true location of a disputed boundary line. Here, the plain language of the deed conveying the property to plaintiff in 1951 established that an old county road rather than a newer state highway was the legal boundary of the property. Plaintiff failed to establish the location of the boundary as the state highway and thus did not meet the burden of proof. The trial court's conclusion that the state highway was the true legal boundary was reversible error. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000). See also McAlpin v. Smith, 123 M 391, 213 P2d 602 (1950), and Brady v. St. Highway Comm'n, 163 M 416, 517 P2d 738 (1973).

Examination of Chain of Title and Circumstances of Making of Deed in Establishing Legal Boundary: Plaintiff sought to quiet title in a strip of land in Bridger Canyon, alleging that a state highway formed the western boundary of the property rather than an older county road. The District Court agreed. The Supreme Court examined plaintiff's chain of title back to 1903 and found that a deed conveying the property in 1951 unambiguously established the county road as the western boundary of the property. An unambiguous deed must be interpreted according to its written language, without resort to extrinsic evidence of the grantor's intent. Further, under this section, the Supreme Court may examine the circumstances under which a deed was made. Here, the section plats and state highway records, coupled with the plain language of the deed, established that the old county road was the legal western boundary, so the District Court was reversed. Tester v. Tester, 2000 MT 130, 300 M 5, 3 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 538 (2000), followed in Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Contents of Safe Deposit Box Not Considered Jointly Held Asset: Silver directed his son to lease a safe deposit box for Silver's cash and signed a statement authorizing his son's access to the box. The lease form was prepared by a bank employee, who indicated that it was a joint agreement. Without Silver's direction, consent, or knowledge, the son subsequently removed the cash and placed it in his own safe deposit box in the same bank. Silver died 8 days later, and the personal representative sought to recover the cash, a substantial portion of which Silver had bequeathed to a charitable foundation. The District Court allowed the personal representative and a family friend to testify regarding statements that Silver made to them about the cash and its disposition. The court also admitted extrinsic evidence regarding the safe deposit box lease, holding that the fact that the lease form was prepared by a bank employee was relevant to interpretation of the document. The son alleged error on both issues, contending that the cash was a jointly held asset. The Supreme Court, citing Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 M 475, 187 P2d 1018 (1947), and Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035 (1982), found that the contested testimony put into context Silver's lease of the box and constituted evidence of Silver's intent to retain ownership of the cash. The fact that Silver did not select the form of lease or check the box on the lease form was supported by substantial credible evidence and was not clearly erroneous. Nevertheless, the son cited 70-1-308 for the contention that the cash was a jointly held asset. However, both the lease agreement and the statute provided for joint access to and possession of the safe deposit box and its contents, but not for joint ownership of the contents. Moreover, the language regarding the rights of surviving joint tenants did not apply here because Silver was still alive when the cash was removed. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the cash was not a jointly held asset by virtue of the agreement or the statute. The son could cite no contract theory under which he could be declared the owner of the cash, so the District Court did not err in applying gift theory rather than contract theory in determining ownership of the contents of the box or in concluding that the cash was not a gift to the son, based on the fact that Silver retained ownership. The District Court properly awarded the contents of the box to the estate. In re Estate of Silver, 2000 MT 127, 299 M 506, 1 P3d 358, 57 St. Rep. 526 (2000), distinguishing Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201 (1984).

Parol Evidence of Circumstances Under Which Bid Prepared Proper in Interpreting Uncertain Contract Provisions: Bid estimates on a road building project contained vague and ambiguous project requirements, and testimony at trial regarding the height of the finished road was conflicting. Thus, the District Court, in interpreting provisions of the contract that appeared ambiguous or uncertain, properly considered parol evidence of the circumstances under which the bid was prepared. The court found more credible the contractor's testimony that there was not agreement that a subroad would be constructed of pit run gravel 6 inches above field grade, and that determination was affirmed on appeal. DeNiro v. Gasvoda, 1999 MT 129, 294 M 478, 982 P2d 1002, 56 St. Rep. 521 (1999).

Arbitration Clause in Standardized Form Advertising Agreement — Lack of Mutuality of Obligation and Meaningful Choice Considered Unconscionable Contract of Adhesion: Iwen sued U.S. W. Direct for damages for negligent construction of a yellow pages advertisement, infliction of emotional distress, and punitive damages. The District Court held that the parties were bound by the arbitration clause in the directory advertising order. The advertising order was a standardized form, the terms of which Iwen was unable to negotiate and for which Iwen's only choice was to accept or reject, constituting an agreement of adhesion. The arbitration provision lacked mutuality of obligation, was one-sided, and contained terms that were unreasonably favorable to U.S. West Direct, leaving Iwen, as the weaker bargaining party, no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of its provisions. Viewed from the perspective of consumer Iwen, the arbitration clause was held to be unconscionable, and the Supreme Court reversed, striking the arbitration clause, pursuant to 30-2-302, and remanding for further proceedings. Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999), following Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986), and Leibrand v. Loan of Title Based Upon Exchange of Deeds Upheld — Oral Extrinsic Evidence Controlling: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The District Court admitted oral evidence showing that nothing more than a loan of title evidenced by an exchange of deeds was intended. The Supreme Court held that the timing of the execution and delivery of the two deeds was not controlling and that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson, even though it may have been signed and delivered first, was controlling in light of the circumstances of the transaction. The Supreme Court held that the deed conveying the property back to Johnson was valid as between the parties even though it was not recorded until later. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Court Review of Claim of Fraud Inducing Arbitration Clause Not Fraud Inducing Entry Into Contract Allowed Under Federal Arbitration Act: The appellant alleged that fraud had induced him to enter into an option agreement and margin contract with the respondents. The appellant further stated that he had not read the arbitration clause or the clause that exposed him to unlimited losses. The Supreme Court ruled that since the appellant only alleged fraud in the inducement and did not specifically allege that he had been induced to agree to the arbitration clause, the entire matter, including fraud in the inducement, was subject to arbitration under the Uniform Arbitration Act (Title 27, ch. 5). Larsen v. Opie, 237 M 108, 771 P2d 977, 46 St. Rep. 660 (1989).

Extrinsic Evidence Unnecessary When Devise Clear: The language of a devise bequeathed property, if any, left in a partnership at the time of testator's demise. The District Court found the partnership to be a conduit through which the partners conducted their tenancy-in-common business and reported income for tax purposes; however, absent any partnership interest in real property, the court determined no property should pass and properly granted summary judgment. Because the testator's intention could be ascertained from the plain language of the devise alone, it was not necessary or proper for the court to receive extrinsic evidence in making its determination. In re Estate of Greenfield, 232 M 357, 757 P2d 1297, 45 St. Rep. 1112 (1988).

Enforceability of Arbitration Clause in Adhesion Contract: Plaintiffs contended that an arbitration clause in a brokerage agreement should have been declared unenforceable because it appeared in a contract of adhesion. The Supreme Court found nothing in the record to indicate that the arbitration clause was not within the parties' expectations or that the clause was oppressive or unconscionable. The court noted that federal case law demonstrates that arbitration clauses are common and enforceable in brokerage agreements (citing Finkle & Ross v. A.G. Becker Paribas, Inc., 622 F. Supp. 1505 (D.C. N.Y. 1985), and Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 US 1, 79 L Ed 2d 1, 104 S Ct 852 (1984)) and held that even if the customer agreement form was an adhesion contract, the arbitration clause was enforceable. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986), followed in Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26, 50 St. Rep. 1234 (1993), and Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999). See also Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc., 841 F2d 282 (9th Cir. 1988).

Merger of Prior Agreement Into Deed — No Presumption of Surrender of Covenants: Appellants contended that since there was no express language in deeds recorded in 1972 that the parties intended to merge the restrictive provisions of a 1971 agreement into the deeds, the commercial use restrictions in the 1971 agreement still applied, regardless of being left out of the deeds. The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in Story v. Montforton, 112 M 24, 113 P2d 507 (1941), noted that "whether or not there has been a merger depends on the intention of the parties". The court applied this principle in Thisted v. Country Club Tower Corp., 146 M 87, 405 P2d 432 (1965), quoting Reid v. Sykes, 27 Ohio St. 285: "... evidence of that intention may exist in or out of the deed. There is no presumption that a party, in giving or accepting a deed, intends to give up the covenants of which the deed is not a performance or satisfaction." In the present case, the court found strong evidence that the deeds contained all of the restrictions on the lands that were intended by the parties and that the contract had merged in the deeds. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. The Supreme Court held that the cattle and both accounts were partnership property not held in joint tenancy and remained so upon Robert's death. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. In re Estate of Palmer, 218 M 285, 708 P2d 242, 42 St. Rep. 1585 (1985), followed in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Letter Relating to Execution of Lease — Properly Accepted Parol Evidence: In reviewing the trial court's interpretation of the heating cost provisions of a 5-year lease, the Supreme Court held that a letter containing a payment schedule and testimony relating to the schedule was properly accepted parol testimony to explain circumstances surrounding the lease agreement. The letter and testimony aided in resolving the ambiguity existing in the instrument as permitted by 28-2-905(2). The role of the judge is to construe an instrument according to its terms or its substance, not to insert or omit terms. The judge, however, may consider circumstances surrounding the execution, including the situation of the subject of the instrument and of the parties, to place himself in a position to interpret the language. In construing terms, evidence is admissible to show a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification used and understood by the parties. Martin v. Laurel Cable TV, Inc., 215 M 229, 696 P2d 454, 42 St. Rep. 314 (1985).

Ambiguous Assignment — Explanatory Evidence Admissible: A contract for deed reserved one-half the mineral rights in seller. Seller's subsequent assignment was ambiguous where it assigned all of seller's right, title, and interest in the property, together with the contract for deed, yet also stated that it was subject to the contract for deed. Therefore, the evidence was admissible to explain the ambiguity and the intent of seller and assignee of seller's rights under the contract for deed. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Savings Account Signature Card: Evidence of the circumstances under which a signature card creating joint savings accounts was signed was properly admissible under 28-2-905 and showed that no gift was intended by the depositor. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Commodity Account Agreement: A stock brokerage firm explained to a customer the risk involved in a commodity straddle for tax deferral purposes and also had the customer sign a written agreement acknowledging the high degree of risk involved. What the parties meant by the term "risk" was subject to interpretation and could be proved by parol testimony. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Section Inapplicable When Language Plain and Unambiguous: This section is irrelevant in a dispute involving a real estate listing contract where the contract was plain and unambiguous. When the language is plain and unambiguous, the language alone controls and there is nothing for the court to interpret or construe. This section applies when an ambiguity exists in the language of the contract. Payne v. Buechler, 192 M 311, 628 P2d 646, 38 St. Rep. 799 (1981), clarified in Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007).

Termination of Lease — Removal of Holdover Tenant — Agricultural Exception to Landlord-Tenant Act: Defendant sold plaintiff her property. The instrument contained a lease back to defendant of the buildings and 6 acres. Plaintiff gave notice that the lease was to terminate. Defendant refused to vacate. Plaintiff brought an action under the unlawful detainer statutes, which provide for an award of treble damages. Defendant contended the dispute was governed by the Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977. Plaintiff contended the lease was within the "agricultural" exclusion contained in 70-24-104(8). The lease provisions gave no indication of the nature of the buildings or of the intended use of the 6 acres. The trial court allowed the introduction of photographs and oral testimony regarding the lease, which established that the use of the land was for maintenance of defendant's livestock. The trial court properly allowed parol evidence to resolve an ambiguity in the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the legislative intent of 70-24-104 was for a comprehensive coverage of all agricultural operations, whether they are large-scale operations for profit or small-scale operations secondary to the use of the residence. The unlawful detainer provisions were properly applied. Dussault v. Hjelm, 192 M 282, 627 P2d 1237, 38 St. Rep. 738 (1981).

Variation of Terms of Written Contract Held Improper — Evidentiary Rule as Procedural Rule Only: In an action to collect the amount due under a promissory note, the District Court erred in allowing the plaintiff to prove that the terms of a written contract concerning only the terms of sale of a bar also applied to a previous sale of another business. Rule 106, Montana Rules of Evidence, relied on by the District Court to vary the clear terms of the parties' written agreement, is a procedural rule concerning the introduction of only a portion of a whole agreement and cannot be used to affect the substance of the existing law of parol evidence. Spraggins v. Elvidge, 192 M 8, 625 P2d 1151, 38 St. Rep. 493 (1981).

Intent of Contracting Parties — Parol Evidence Admissible to Show Knowledge of Agent: In an action by the plaintiff contractor against the defendant motor carrier for breach of contract caused by the defendant's refusal to haul fabricated silo sections, the court did not err in finding that a memorandum of the agreement by the defendant's employee was sufficiently clear to form a valid contract. Parol evidence is admissible to apply the memorandum to the subject matter of the contract. The evidence showed that agents of the defendant knew the subject matter of the contract and that knowledge is imputed to the defendant and will be applied to the memorandum to determine the intent of the defendant as to the subject matter of the contract. Empire Steel Mfg. v. Carlson, 191 M 189, 622 P2d 1016, 38 St. Rep. 101 (1981).

Written Divorce Settlement Agreement — Simultaneous Oral Agreement Given Effect When No Objection Made: At the conclusion of a hearing on the enforcement of his divorce settlement agreement several months after his divorce, the former husband moved to amend the finding of deficiency of the settlement agreement or, in the alternative, to grant a new trial. Appeal was taken from the denial of the motion. One ground was the assertion that the District Court erred in considering evidence of an oral agreement made simultaneously with the written settlement agreement. The record disclosed no objection during trial to the wife's testimony about the automobile and the insurance to be furnished her. The failure to raise the issue of parol evidence at the trial court forfeited any right to a remedy on appeal. In re Marriage of Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Waiver of Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien): The circumstances of the parties to a transaction and their real purpose in executing instruments relating thereto is subject to interpretation and may be proved by parol testimony. Plaintiff retained lien rights for money owing to him despite his execution of a series of lien releases written in general terms when each release was executed upon the payment of an amount of money and uncontradicted parol testimony indicated that the parties regarded the lien waivers to be releases only as to amounts paid and not general releases of lien rights. Fillbach v. Inland Constr. Corp., 178 M 374, 584 P2d 1274 (1978).

Amended Contract for Deed: When sellers of land argued that the buyers misled them as to the effect of an escrow agreement and warranty deed, estoppel had no application since the court found that sellers possessed a copy of the instruments for a considerable length of time and had ample opportunity to examine them. Furthermore, since sellers failed to plead fraud by amending their pleadings, they were not entitled to present parol evidence to show that these instruments constituted an acceptance of the land under the doctrine of estoppel. Tschache v. Barclay, 172 M 415, 564 P2d 1299 (1977).

Building Lease: Statements made by various agency personnel in regard to continued use of defendant's office building were not admissible under parol evidence rule to alter or contradict terms of express written contract since such statements and assurances did not come within any recognized exception to rule and since defendant admitted that he knew written contract would be controlling. U.S. v. Willard E. Fraser Co., 308 F. Supp. 557 (D.C. Mont. 1970), affirmed in 459 F2d 483 (9th Cir. 1972).

Intention of Parties:

Informal written instrument stating "I wish to pay" and uncontradicted evidence that donor rejected lawyers and wanted to give a gift established donative intent. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Under this section and 1-4-103, a contract, the provisions of which are called in question years after its making, must be construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made and the intention of the parties must be pursued if possible. Cove Irrigation District v. Yellowstone Ditch Co., 90 M 323, 3 P2d 280 (1931).

Mineral Deed: No ambiguity existed between clause conveying one-half of the minerals in 1,040 acres and the conveyance of 520 mineral acres so that mineral deed could not be varied by parol evidence. Superior Oil Co. v. Vanderhoof, 297 F. Supp. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Farm Lease Agreement: Where the issue was whether a lease valid on its face was intended by the parties to be conditioned on approval of an FHA loan to the lessee, the court could, despite 70-20-202, consider all the surrounding circumstances. Platt v. Clark, 141 M 376, 378 P2d 235 (1963).

Insurance Policies: The entire series of transactions respecting issuance of an automobile liability policy by defendant to contractors, who had contracted with state to construct bridges, and the furnishing of a surety bond by defendant providing that contractors would faithfully perform their contract was to be considered in determining defendant's liability for satisfaction of judgments which plaintiff recovered against contractors in action for deaths of plaintiff's intestates who died as consequence of negligence of contractors' employee while operating an automobile. USF&G Co. v. Doheny, 123 F2d 746 (9th Cir. 1941), affirming 34 F. Supp. 888 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Sale Contract: Parol evidence is admissible to show the situation and relation of the parties to an oral contract of sale of personalty evidenced by a memorandum in writing, as well as the surrounding circumstances at the time of its execution, and also for the purpose of applying the description in the memorandum and thus identifying the subject matter of the contract, provided the subject matter is so described by the memorandum as to be capable of certain identification as well as to explain latent ambiguities. Lewis v. Aronow, 77 M 348, 251 P 146 (1926).

Employment Contract: Letters interchanged between the president of a corporation, signed by him personally, and plaintiff, considered in the light of the circumstances under which they were written, showed a contract of employment for a certain term, for the breach of which plaintiff was entitled to recover. Edwards v. Plains Light & Water Co., 49 M 535, 143 P 962 (1914).

Bill of Sale: To aid the construction of a bill of sale, the circumstances under which it was made may be shown; and in doing this, conversations prior to the sale about the subject matter thereof and not in conflict with the terms of the bill of sale may be considered. Sutherland v. Green, 49 M 379, 142 P 636 (1914).

Stipulations: In arriving at the intent of parties to a stipulation, the circumstances under which the stipulation was made, its subject matter, and the parties to it may be considered. The rules applicable to the construction of contracts generally control in interpreting stipulations. Murphy v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 44 M 146, 119 P 717 (1911).

Mercantile Usage of Terms: The evidence of merchants and businessmen is admissible to explain the meaning of mercantile phrases endorsed upon a memorandum of sale. Newell v. Nicholson, 17 M 389, 43 P 180 (1896).

Building Contract Bond: A bond given in connection with a building contract and conditioned for the furnishing of all labor and material necessary to the completion of the building, as specified and shown on the plans furnished by the architect, need not be so reformed, before a recovery thereon, as to refer to said contract, since the instruments, being contemporaneous and parts of the same transaction, may be construed together to explain each other under this section. Watson v. O'Neill, 14 M 197, 35 P 1064 (1894). See also Hogan v. Shields, 20 M 438, 52 P 55 (1898).

1-4-103. Intention of the parties — particular and general provisions.

Case Notes

Question Whether Scope of Easement Included Residential Use — Conflicting Evidence Presented — Summary Judgment Improper: The parties' predecessors-in-interest entered into a road easement limited to farming and ranching operations. The plaintiff, who was the grantor's successor, alleged that the defendant, the grantee's successor, had violated the easement by placing a mobile home on her land accessed by the easement. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, concluding that the language of the easement was clear and unambiguous as to its scope and that the scope included residential use. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, noting that the easement language did not explicitly contemplate residential purposes, and remanded the matter for a trial to determine whether the scope of the easement allowed residential purposes. Quarter Circle JP Ranch, LLC v. Jerde, 2018 MT 68, 391 Mont. 104, 414 P.3d 1277.

Parol Evidence Necessary to Determine Intention When Latent Ambiguity Exists: A party transferred property back to sellers in lieu of foreclosure. The transfer arguably constituted a technical conveyance. "Conveyance" had different meanings for the parties and therefore was to be interpreted in accord with the manifest intent of the parties. Parol evidence was necessarily admissible to demonstrate and explain this latent ambiguity, and summary judgment on the issue was improper. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987), followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Trust Instruments: Subsequent declarations of the trustor are relevant and are to be considered in determining the meaning of the word "issue" used in an instrument creating a trust. Holter v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 135 M 27, 336 P2d 701 (1959).

Intention of Parties to Contract:

In the construction of a contract the intention of the parties at the time of contracting must be pursued if possible, which intention must be gathered from the entire instrument and not from particular words or phrases or disjointed parts of it, and in the ascertainment of such intention the subject matter of the contract and the purposes of its execution are material. St. v. Rosman, 84 M 207, 274 P 850 (1929).

In the construction of an antenuptial agreement settling property rights, the rule appertaining to the interpretation of contracts that the intention of the parties must govern is controlling. Further, such an agreement must be liberally construed. In re Oppenheimer's Estate, 73 M 560, 238 P 599 (1925).

In the interpretation of a contract the intention of the parties must be pursued if possible, the intention to be gathered from the entire agreement, not from particular words or phrases or disjointed or particular parts of it, the subject matter and the purposes of its execution being material to the ascertainment of their intention and the meaning of the terms used. Lee v. Lee Gold Min. Co., 71 M 592, 230 P 1091 (1924).

In the construction of a contract the courts must if possible ascertain and give effect to the mutual intention of the parties at the time they entered into it so far as that may be done without contravening legal principles, greater regard being had to their clear intent than to any particular words used in the expression of that intent. Winkelmann v. Minn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 66 M 451, 213 P 1104 (1923).

Particular and General Provisions:

Where under the first clause of a contract a party bound himself generally as a surety but under a subsequent one the conditions under which he would be liable were particularly set forth which in effect made him a guarantor, the two clauses were so inconsistent with each other as to warrant application of the doctrine that where a general and a particular provision of a contract are inconsistent the latter must prevail, and therefore the promisor was a guarantor and not a surety and could not be joined as defendant in an action to recover the amounts, payment of which he had guaranteed. Butte Mach. Co. v. Carbonate Hill Mill. Co., 75 M 167, 242 P 956 (1925).

In an action against the sureties upon the official bond of their principal, where the sureties had limited their penal obligation to specified sums, which sums were also set opposite their respective signatures, and the bond contained a general provision reading, "for the payment of which, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, representatives, administrators, and assigns, jointly and severally, by these presents", the particular provision limiting the liability of the sureties would prevail over the inconsistent general provision, and the sureties were bound severally and not jointly. Butte v. Cohen, 9 M 435, 24 P 206 (1890).

1-4-105. Written words versus words in printed form.

Case Notes

"Payable on Death" Designation Negates Joint Tenancy Language on CD Form: The deceased's personal representative was his granddaughter, who was also the person named as the payable on death (POD) beneficiary of the deceased on several certificates of deposit (CDs). The granddaughter obtained a ruling from the District Court that she was a joint tenant with the right of survivorship with respect to the CDs, based upon the language on the CD forms specifically stating that the persons named on the CD were joint tenants. The Supreme Court held that a joint tenancy must be created by specific unambiguous language and that the POD designation on the CDs created an ambiguity negating the joint tenancy language. The Supreme Court further held that the POD language meant that the granddaughter could not have a present interest in the CDs at the time that the CDs were obtained by the deceased and that they could not pass to her under the principles of joint tenancy. The Supreme Court ruled that the POD designation acted to transfer the CDs to the granddaughter outside of the probate estate as a nontestamentary transfer. In re Estate of Lahren, 268 M 284, 886 P2d 412, 51 St. Rep. 1311 (1994), following In re Estate of Shaw, 259 M 117, 855 P2d 105 (1993).

Petition for Judicial Relief: When a printed form for a petition to declare children to be dependent and neglected contained a blank space and the words "we request temporary custody" were typed in the space, the written words controlled those which were printed and the petition was one for temporary and not permanent custody. Welfare Dept. v. Endres, 166 M 379, 533 P2d 959 (1975).

Sale Contract: Where a contract of sale of an automobile provided in writing "Terms on balance—140.00 due on delivery" and in printing "Balance due upon delivery", the former supplanted the latter. Backer v. Parker-Morelli-Barclay Motor Co., 87 M 595, 289 P 571 (1930). See also New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Songer, 91 M 127, 7 P2d 238 (1931).

1-4-106. Interpretation of language according to usage in place of execution.

Case Notes

Custom and Usage for Interpretation: Evidence of a custom or usage in a particular business, in the instant case the brokerage business, is admissible in aid of the interpretation of a written instrument. Healy v. First Nat'l Bank of Great Falls, 108 M 180, 89 P2d 555 (1939).

Must Plead Custom or Usage: Where customs or usages relating to a particular locality or trade are relied upon, they must be pleaded by the party seeking to make them a basis for recovery or defense. Lewis v. Aronow, 77 M 348, 251 P 146 (1926).

Contract Explicit — No Need to Interpret: Evidence of custom is never competent when the contract is clear and explicit in its terms and the necessity for interpretation does not arise. Under these circumstances the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing itself without resort to evidence. Wheeler v. James, 70 M 37, 223 P 900 (1924).

1-4-107. Construction of terms.

Case Notes

Subjective Standard Applicable to Term "Satisfactory": A real estate listing contract contained the following clause, typed in by the realtor: "This listing is subject to Fultz being able to satisfactory [sic] trade the above lands for lands in Big Horn Co. on a tax free exchange." The realtor argued that an objective standard for a satisfactory trade should be used. The District Court found that because the realtor drafted the contract, any ambiguities should be construed against him. The term "satisfactory" was found to be a subjective standard rather than a reasonable man standard. Because the trade arrangement set up by the realtor did not meet the requirement of a tax-free exchange, the arrangement was properly found to be unsatisfactory under the contract terms. Watson v. Fultz, 239 M 364, 782 P2d 361, 46 St. Rep. 1751 (1989).

Letter Relating to Execution of Lease — Properly Accepted Parol Evidence: In reviewing the trial court's interpretation of the heating cost provisions of a 5-year lease, the Supreme Court held that a letter containing a payment schedule and testimony relating to the schedule was properly accepted parol testimony to explain circumstances surrounding the lease agreement. The letter and testimony aided in resolving the ambiguity existing in the instrument as permitted by 28-2-905(2). The role of the judge is to construe an instrument according to its terms or its substance, not to insert or omit terms. The judge, however, may consider circumstances surrounding the execution, including the situation of the subject of the instrument and of the parties, to place himself in a position to interpret the language. In construing terms, evidence is admissible to show a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification used and understood by the parties. Martin v. Laurel Cable TV, Inc., 215 M 229, 696 P2d 454, 42 St. Rep. 314 (1985).

Prior Agreement Establishing Meaning: Where amended agreement between automobile insurer and reinsurer was the same as that contained in prior agreement, which the parties had interpreted as contended for by the insurer, findings that agreement was ambiguous and that the parties did not intend to give the words in the amendment a different meaning than that given in the agreement, being supported by substantial evidence, warranted judgment in favor of insurer. Peerless Cas. Co. v. Mtn. St. Mut. Cas. Co., 283 F2d 268 (9th Cir. 1960).

Trade Usage: For the purpose of enabling the court to interpret the abbreviations No. 1 D. N. S., used in a memorandum evidencing the sale of wheat to a wheat buyer, where the oral contract of sale was attacked on the ground that it was void under the Statute of Frauds, parol evidence was admissible to show their customary meaning in the business of dealing in wheat. Lewis v. Aronow, 77 M 348, 251 P 146 (1926).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Negligence in Taking Acknowledgment — Liability for Damages: At the behest of the husband, a notary public took the acknowledgment of a deed transferring real property without knowing or having satisfactory evidence that the wife, whose name appeared on the deed as signator-grantor, was the individual described in and who executed the deed. The wife was not present at the time of acknowledgment and was never contacted by the notary; nevertheless, the notary signed the certificate of acknowledgment as if the wife had personally appeared and made the acknowledgment. The notary public was negligent in performance of official duty and was liable for damages proximately caused by such negligence. McWilliams v. Clem, 228 M 297, 743 P2d 577, 44 St. Rep. 1536 (1987), distinguishing Mahoney v. Dixon, 31 M 107, 77 P 519 (1904), and Ellis v. Hale, 58 M 181, 194 P 155 (1920).

Illegally Acknowledged Assignment Document: Since a broker altered an assignment document after it was signed by taping the acknowledgment paragraph to the document and illegally presenting it to a notary for an acknowledgment and the notary illegally acknowledged the purchasers' signatures without requiring their presence, the assignment was invalid and could not convey a security interest in the contract for deed to secure performance of the promissory note signed by the purchasers. Hoefer v. Wilckens, 210 M 218, 684 P2d 468, 41 St. Rep. 1019 (1984).

Power of Attorney in Heirship Matter: A power of attorney was given by an heir residing in Spain to the Spanish Consul General in the United States. The acknowledgment was made as required by 1-5-103 (now repealed), and this was sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 91-3802, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Case Notes

Fatally Deficient Bill of Costs — Award of Costs Vacated: Defense attorney Nelson signed a verification of costs, but was not actually sworn and did not attest to personal knowledge of the costs incurred. Rather, Nelson signed a document purporting to present his partner Dahle's knowledge and belief and indicating that Dahle had been duly sworn. However, Dahle was not actually present to subscribe to the statement, sign the verification, or be sworn by the notary. The bill of costs was therefore fatally defective, and the Supreme Court vacated the award of costs to defendant. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

General Provisions

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 42 in definition of code, after "means the", inserted "Montana Code Annotated, which is a reenactment of the" and after "1947" substituted "as provided in 1-11-103" for "the pocket supplements thereto, and the replacement volumes"; and in definition of recodify, at end of (2)(h) after "amendments", deleted "such as those found in 1-1-202(7)". Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 292 at end of (2)(h) deleted "or 3-11-101(2)"; and made minor changes in style.

Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 62, Ch. 16, L. 1991, provided: "The code commissioner is instructed to implement 1-11-101(2)(g)(ii) by correcting any clearly inaccurate references to other sections of the Montana Code Annotated contained in material enacted by the 52nd legislature." Section 1-11-101(2)(g)(ii) provides that recodification includes correcting (without changing the meaning, effect, or intent of any law) any inaccurate or obsolete references to other code sections, such as those that have been repealed or repealed and replaced, when given authority by another statute. Therefore, sec. 62, Ch. 16, L. 1991, constitutes authority for the Code Commissioner to correct erroneous references without the necessity of legislative action.

1981 Amendment: In (2)(i), deleted "whether originally written by the legislature or by the code publisher" at the beginning and at end inserted "unless the section captions are specifically and expressly adopted as part of the law by the legislature".

Case Notes

Codification — Proper Statement of Law — No Practical Difference Between Two Versions: In an action by an out-of-state corporation against Montana parties for interference with a contract, it was discovered that the codified version of 27-19-405, a statute central to the case, differed from the corresponding official enrolled bill passed by the Legislature. The difference arose because the section was amended in two separate bills by the 1979 Legislature. The version as codified by the Code Commissioner is a hybrid of the two legislative enactments; there is no practical difference between the different versions of the section. The Legislature has given the Code Commissioner the power to change the language of a law without changing its substance or intent. The present codification of 27-19-405 contained in the 1983 Montana Code Annotated is a proper statement of the law as intended by the Legislature. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Mktg. of Mont., Inc., 214 M 377, 693 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 32 (1985).

Adoption of Code: Section 1, Ch. 1, L. 1979, provided: "(1) The Montana Code Annotated (1978) as recodified and published by the code commissioner under the authority of Chapter 419, Laws of 1975, as amended by Chapter 1, Laws of 1977, is adopted as prima facie the law of Montana.

(2) The Montana Code Annotated may be cited as "MCA" and shall be given effect as provided in section 6, Chapter 419, Laws of 1975, as amended by section 4, Chapter 1, Laws of 1977, and set forth in 1-11-103, MCA."

1-11-103. Effect of Montana Code Annotated — official version.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 100 inserted (7) establishing the Montana Code Annotated as the official version of Montana statutes; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 17, 1993.

1981 Amendment: In (5), inserted "and expressly" before "adopted" and substituted "part of the law" for "such".

Case Notes

Effect of Recodification: The recodification of a statute is merely a ministerial and administrative function performed by the Code Commissioner under the authority of the Legislature. It does not serve as a reenactment of the statute, nor does it remove any constitutional infirmity that existed at the time the statute was enacted. The test of a statute's constitutionality is made at the time it takes effect and is made against the constitution as it exists at the time the statute takes effect. Gallatin County v. McClue, 222 M 201, 721 P2d 338, 43 St. Rep. 1174 (1986).

Codification — Proper Statement of Law — No Practical Difference Between Two Versions: In an action by an out-of-state corporation against Montana parties for interference with a contract, it was discovered that the codified version of 27-19-405, a statute central to the case, differed from the corresponding official enrolled bill passed by the Legislature. The difference arose because the section was amended in two separate bills by the 1979 Legislature. The version as codified by the Code Commissioner is a hybrid of the two legislative enactments; there is no practical difference between the different versions of the section. The Legislature has given the Code Commissioner the power to change the language of a law without changing its substance or intent. The present codification of 27-19-405 contained in the 1983 Montana Code Annotated is a proper statement of the law as intended by the Legislature. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Text of Statute Controlling: A term found in the title (catchline) of a statute that was inadvertently placed there does not violate due process principles. It is the body of an act and not its title which controls in satisfying notice requirements. In re Mont. Pac. Oil & Gas Co., 189 M 11, 614 P2d 1045 (1980), citing Mfr's Acceptance Corp. v. Krsul, 151 M 28, 438 P2d 667 (1968).

Attorney General's Opinions

Transfer of License Plates to Unregistered Vehicle — Vehicle Registration Fees to Be Paid: A conflict arose between the codified version of 61-3-321 and the version amended in Ch. 596, L. 2005, raising a question whether vehicle registration fees must be paid if the vehicle to which license plates are transferred is not currently registered. The Attorney General invoked this section to resolve the inconsistency and to give effect to the amendments in Ch. 596, concluding that the coordination section in Ch. 596 prescribed that all registration fees imposed under 61-3-321, as amended, must be paid if the vehicle to which license plates are transferred is not currently registered. 51 A.G. Op. 14 (2006).

Concurrence of Guaranty Fund Required When Department Seeks Additional Security by Self-Insured Employer — Legal Effect of Saving Clause: The saving clause attached to Ch. 150, L. 1993, although not codified, was part of the enrolled bill and must be given legal effect. The saving clause controls by providing that in all cases except those involving workers' compensation liabilities accrued prior to July 1, 1989, the Department of Labor and Industry must obtain the concurrence of The Montana self-insurers guaranty fund when seeking to require an employer who self-insures to give security in addition to the security that the employer has already provided. 46 A.G. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 349 near middle of (1), before "submit", deleted "as provided in 5-11-210".

1991 Amendments: Chapter 16 deleted former (1) and (2) that read: "(1) Prior to January 1, 1979, the code commissioner shall recodify all the laws of a general and permanent nature appearing in the codes and session laws and prepare them for publication.

(2) Prior to January 1, 1979, the commissioner shall prepare and submit to the legislature a report which is certified by the commissioner as the "Official Report of the Montana Code Commissioner", together with a bill enacting the Montana Code Annotated. A copy of the report and bill shall be deposited with the secretary of state. The report shall explain and indicate, in tabular or other form, all changes made during recodification, other than punctuation and capitalization, to clearly indicate the character of each change"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 112 in (1) inserted reference to 5-11-210. Amendment effective March 20, 1991.

Code Commissioner Instruction: Section 83, Ch. 83, L. 1989, provided: "The code commissioner is instructed to implement 1-11-101(2)(g)(ii) by correcting any clearly inaccurate references to other sections of the Montana Code Annotated contained in material enacted by the 51st legislature."

1985 Amendment: Near beginning of (5)(c) substituted "publish a report entitled" for "submit to each legislature a report certified as the".

Effect of Publishing Supreme Court Rules: Section 2, Ch. 1, L. 1979, provided: "(1) The legislature recognizes the supreme court's authority pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution to make rules governing procedure and practice before the courts.

(2) The legislature also recognizes that the practice of printing such rules with the Montana statutes is of benefit to code users and facilitates implementation of Article VII, section 2(3), of the Montana constitution concerning disapproval by the legislature.

(3) Therefore, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, printed as chapter 20, Title 25, MCA; the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [redesignated the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure in 1987, now superseded], printed as chapter 21, Title 25, MCA; and the Montana Rules of Evidence, printed as chapter 10, Title 26, MCA, appear only for the purpose of facilitating use of the code. Neither this act nor publication of the rules may be construed as an attempt to readopt or promulgate the rules."

Code Commissioner Report: The Official Report of the Montana Code Commissioner—1979 appears in the unnumbered volume to the MCA, 1978. The Official Report of the Montana Code Commissioner—1979 (Supplemental) appears in Vol. 1 of the annotations.

Transition: Section 4, Ch. 99, L. 1993, provided: "Uniform state law commissioners appointed by the governor shall continue in office until the expiration of their current term."

1-12-104. Duties of commissioners.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 99 in (1), before "attend", inserted "attempt to", after "laws and" deleted "both in and out of such national conference", and before "promote" deleted "do all in his power to"; and made minor changes in style.

1983 Amendment: Deleted former (2), which read: "Said commission shall report as provided in 2-7-102."
